The school called Stoic, from the 'Painted Stoa' or Porch at Athens frequented by its masters, was founded by Zeno (344–260 B. C.) and developed by his followers Cleanthes and Chrysippus.
R. C. JEBB Greek Literature pt. ii, ch. 3, p. 136. [A. '89.]

Sto'ic, n. 1. A member of one of the chief philosophic sects of antiquity, one of the ethical schools of Greek philosophy (see GREEK), founded by Zeno about 308 B. C.

The Stoics drew their philosophy mainly from their predecessors, especially Socrates and Aristotle. Their cosmology was pantheistic, matter and force being the two ultimate principles, and God being the working force of the universe, giving it its unity, beauty, and adaptation. They sought, in their theory of knowledge, a subjective criterion of truth, which they found in that which was evident in the impressions or representations of the senses, to which they limited all scientific knowledge. The chief merit and the formative element in their philosophy, however, lay in the field of ethics. They were the first to discriminate rigorously and to sever completely the morally good from the merely agreeable and to reduce the latter to the rank of indifference, making the highest good to consist in virtue, or the agreement of human conduct with the all-controlling law of nature or of the human will with the divine will. In accordance with this doctrine they sternly repressed all emotion, and generally condemned pleasure and all personal ends.

Philosophy rose to its highest level through the Stoics at a time when the Greek mind was declining.
GLADSTONE Impregnable Rock essay iii, p. 102. [I. & CO. '90.]

2. [s-] Hence, an unimpassioned person; one indifferent to pleasure or pain; also, a rigorous moralist; a severe ascetic. [< L. stoicus, of a porch, < Gr. stōïkos, < stoa, porch, < Stoa Poikilē, 'the Painted Porch,' in the Agora at Athens, frequented by Zeno.] Sto-i'cian†.

stop[1], n. 1. The act of stopping, or the state of being stopped; cessation from progress or operation; a halt; pause; close; cessation; as, to come to a stop; to bring something to a stop. 2. That which stops or obstructs; an obstruction or obstacle; a hindrance.

These be the stops that hinder study quite.
SHAKESPEARE Love's Labour's Lost act i, sc. 1.

3. In musical instruments: (1) The pressing down of a string by the finger, or, in wind-instruments, the closing of an aperture, in order to change the pitch of the tone emitted; stopping. (2) A key, lever, or handle for stopping a string or an aperture: (a) in an organ, a knob or handle by which a particular set of pipes is thrown into or out of action; a draw-stop; stop-knob; (b) in a harpsichord, a handle by which a lever was worked to control the position of a jack. (3) A fret for a guitar. (4) In an organ, a set of pipes or reeds producing tones of the same quality, and arranged in regular musical progression.

An organ-stop may be a foundation-stop, a mutation-s., or a mixture-s. The first two have but one pipe to each digital, whereas the mixtures have two, three, or more. A foundation-stop is one whose tone agrees with the normal pitch of the digital struck or with some octave of it. It is known in the first case as an 8-foot s. on the manuals, and a 16-foot s. on the pedals. It is a 16-foot s. or a 32-foot s. respectively, when it sounds the octave or two octaves lower than the 8-foot stops, and a 4-foot s. and 2-foot s. when it sounds the octave or the fifteenth above. Mutation-stops produce a tone that is neither the normal pitch nor an octave of the digital struck, and include the tierce, quint, twelfth, etc., sounding respectively a third, a fifth, a twelfth, etc., higher than the tone properly corresponding to the digital depressed. Among varieties of organ-stops are also the complete stop (having at least one pipe or reed to a note), compound s. (more than one pipe or reed to a note), flue-s. (composed of flue-pipes — see ORGAN-PIPE), incomplete or imperfect s. (when having less than the full number of pipes), manual s. (corresponding to the manual keyboard), open s. (having the pipes open at their upper ends), pedal s. (corresponding to the pedals, as distinguished from manual stops), solo s. (having specially heavy wind, or a special tone-quality), string s. (producing tones in imitation of a stringed instrument). Compare DIAPASON. The forms of draw-stop are the mechanical s. or coupler; see COUPLER, 1; and the sounding s. or speaking s. (controlling a set of pipes). See also KNEE-STOP.

4. A mark, often popularly regarded as indicating a pause; a punctuation-mark.

All stops in it (sacred text) are purely human inventions; and . . . they should be as few as possible and only those positively required. H. ALFORD Greek Testament, Prolegomena in vol. i, ch. 6, § 1, p. 99. [8 '63.]

5. In joinery: (1) A wooden batten or block on a door- or window-frame, against which a door or a casement window-sash may close. (2) A block or pin to check sliding motion, as of a drawer. 6. Naut. (1) A projection at a lower masthead, supporting the trestletrees. (2) A small line for lashing or fastening anything temporarily: often named from the object of attachment; as, a hammock-stop. (3) A notch or scoring to keep a timber, as a carline, in position. 7. Optics. A perforated diaphragm to decrease the effective aperture of a lens, as for cutting off superfluous light or increasing the defining power. 8. The point at which the warp-threads in a lace-frame are brought together, forming a place from which the pattern may be measured. 9. The depression between the cranial and the nasal bones in the face of a dog: prominent in the bulldog. 10. Phon. A sound in speech arising from the closure of the mouth, specifically a mute consonant, as t, d, k, b; also, the closure in the articulation of such a sound. 11. Fencing. A stop-thrust. 12. A card-game in which certain cards, called stop-cards, terminate play when they appear: a variety of newmarket. 13. In battue-shooting, one of the men posted behind the gunners to prevent birds from flying too far.

Synonyms: see CESSATION; PERIOD; REST[1].

stra'ny, stré'ni, n. [Prov. Eng.] The guillemot.

strap, strap, v. [STRAPPED, STRAPT; STRAP'PING.] I. t. 1. To fasten or bind with a strap; as, to strap on skates.

He kept his trunks strapped, that a moment need not be lost when the message arrived. REBECCA H. DAVIS in The Independent, New York, Nov. 24, '92, p. 33, col. 4.

2. To beat, flog, or chastise with a strap. 3. To sharpen on or as on a strap, as an edged tool; strop. 4. Naut. To surround or furnish with a strap, as a deadeye. 5. [Scot.] To hang, as a malefactor.

II. i. [Scot.] To be hanged.

—to be strapped (slang), to be put at the end of one's resources, especially with regard to ready money.

strap, n. 1. A long, narrow, and flexible strip of leather or other material, often fitted with a buckle or buckles, for fastening about objects.

One of these straps supported the sword; the other, which was larger and broader, the shield.
ANTHON Homer's Iliad bk. II, l. 386-393, note.

2. Something for a special use, made of or having as its essential part or parts one or more such strips; as, a shawl-strap; a boot-strap. 3. Any strip, band, plate, or piece for holding or binding objects or parts together or holding them in place. Particularly: (1) A thin metal band or plate variously shaped and bent for holding together the parts of a frame or structure, as the corners of a box, or to attach a hook to a doubletree; a clip or similar device. (2) Steam-engine. An eccentric-strap (see ECCENTRIC), or a similar U-shaped metal piece, holding the brasses in place at the end of a connecting-rod. (3) Naut. (a) An endless rope by which an object is slung from a tackle. (b) A band of rope or metal placed about a block or deadeye for holding it in place; also, a ring of rope for slinging a cask or bale, to which a tackle may be hooked for hoisting or lowering.

4. A razor-strop. 5. A shoulder-strap. 6. A heavy strip of leather, such as is used in flogging. 7. A strap-oyster. 8. [Scot.] A string. 9. [Prov. Eng.] Credit; formerly, credit for drink. [< AS. stropp, < L. strop-pus, thong; cp. Gr. strophos, twisted cord.]

Compounds:—strap'-bolt", n. 1. A flat metal strap with a bolt on one end; a lug-bolt. 2. A bolt with a nut on each end, bent, as in U form, so as to pass around something and serve as a strap or clip.—s.-game, n. A cheating trick or game, fast and loose. See FAST, a.—s.-head†, n. Mach. A journal-box at the end of a connecting-rod.—s.-hinge, n. A hinge having long leaves, designed for attaching to the flat surfaces of a door and jamb instead of to the opposing edges, so that when the door is closed the leaves are extended.—s.-laid, a. Formed of two or more hawser-laid strands placed side by side and bound together so as to form a flat rope.—s.-loop, n. A strap in the form of a loop; especially, a metal strap bent for use as a clip.—s.-mounts, n. pl. The buckles and other mountings fitted on leather straps.—s.-oil, n. Humorous.] A beating, as with a strap; flogging.—s.-oyster, n. [Local, U. S.] A long, slender oyster growing upright in mud. stick'-up‡.—s.-rail, n. A flat rail, spiked to lengthwise stringers, formerly used on railroads. See illus. under RAIL.—s.-shaped, a. Bot. Shaped like a strap; linear, and in length about six times the breadth; ligulate.—s.-skein, n. A flat iron strip let into the axle-arm of a vehicle as a protection against wear.—s.-wire, n. Elec. An insulated rectangular copper wire used in winding very large dynamos and motors. strip'-wire"‡.

strap-pa'do, strap-pā'dō, S. or -pē'dō, C. E. W. Wr., vt. To punish or torture by the strappado.

strap-pa'do, n. 1. A former military punishment in which the offender was drawn up at the end of a rope, and allowed to fall suddenly till he was stopped with a jerk near the ground or floor. The hands were often fastened behind the back and the rope attached to the wrists. Dislocation of a limb was a frequent result. 2. Loosely, a strapping; beating with or as with a strap.

He gave me the strappado on my shoulders, and the bastinado on the soles of my feet. BICKERSTAFF The Padlock act I, sc. 3.

[< It. strappata, a pulling, < strappare, pull, < G. dial. strapfen, stretch.]

strap'per, strap'ėr, n. 1. One who uses or works with a strap or straps. 2. [Colloq.] A huge or bulky person or object.

strap'ping, strap'ing, a. [Colloq.] Large and muscular; strong; robust; as, a strapping person.

A great strapping fellow with his full allowance of bluster.
T. HUGHES Tom Brown at Rugby pt. I, ch. 2, p. 44. [O. & CO. '71.]

strap'ping, n. 1. The act of one who or that which straps, in any sense of the verb; especially, in colloquial use, a beating with a strap; a flogging. 2. Material for straps.—strap'ping-plate", n. A spear-plate.

strap'ple†, vt. To hold fast as with a strap; entangle.

strapt, pp. Strapped. PHIL. SOC.

strap'work", strap'wūrk', n. Arch. Ornamentation representing crossed or interlaced bands or straps.

strap'worm", strap'wūrm', n. A liguloid tapeworm.

stra"sci-can'do, strā"shi-cān'dō, a. [It.] Mus. Dragging; slurring the tones and slackening time. stra"sci-ca'to‡.

strass[1], stras, C. W., or strās, n. Same as PASTE, 4. [< Josef Strasser, the inventor.]

strass[2], n. Refuse of silk left in making into skeins.

stra'ta, strē'ta or strā'ta, n. Plural of STRATUM.

strat'a-gem, strat'u-jem, n. 1. A piece of generalship or a shrewd maneuver designed to deceive or outwit an enemy; an artifice in war; hence, any clever trick or device for obtaining an advantage.

His [Charles I.'s] first measure . . . must be allowed to have been as bad a one as was possible, for it was a trick; it deserved not the more respectable name of a stratagem.
BROUGHAM British Constitution ch. 15, p. 226. [G. . & CO. '61.]

2. The art of plotting or contriving so as to mislead; also, stratagems collectively; as, he failed in fighting but succeeded in stratagem. [< F. stratagème, < L. strategema, < Gr. stratēgēma, < stratēgos, general, < stratos, army, + agō, lead.]

Synonyms: see ARTIFICE; CHICANERY; PLOT.

stra"a-gem-at'ic†, a. Employing or skilful in stratagem.—stra"a-gem-at'ic-al-ly†, adv.

stra'tal, strē'tal or strā'tal, a. Geol. Pertaining to, derived from, characteristic of, or caused by strata.

strat"a-rith'me-try, strat'u-rith'mę-tri, n. The art of forming a number of men in geometrical figures and of estimating the number of men contained in such a figure. [< Gr. stratos, army, + arithmos, number, + metron, measure.]

strat"e-get'ic, strat'ę-jet'ic, a. Strategic. strat"e-get'ic-al‡.—strat"ē-get'ic-al-ly, adv.—strat"e-get'ics, n. Strategy.

stra-teg'ic, stra-tej'ic or -tī'jic (XIII), a. Of or pertaining to strategy; characterized by, used in, or having relation to strategy; as, a strategic movement or position.

Zaragoza, . . . one of the great Spanish magazines for arms, furnished a point of union for two great roads, and was consequently of strategic importance. W. F. P. NAPIER War in the Peninsula vol. I, bk. I, ch. 4, p. 43. [A. & S.]

[< Gr. stratēgikos, < stratēgos; see STRATAGEM.] strate-teg'ic-al‡.—strategic point, a location that affords a vantage-ground against a foe, as a mountain pass, or an eminence commanding a waterway.

—stra-teg'ic-al-ly, adv.—stra-teg'ics, n. The art or science of strategy.

strat'e-gist, strat'ę-jist, n. One versed in strategy.

stra-te'gus, stra-tī'gus or -tē'gus, n. [-GI, -JĀI or -gī, pl.] A general or military commander among the ancient Greeks. [L., < Gr. stratēgos; see STRATAGEM.]

strat'e-gy, strat'ę-ji, n. [-GIES, pl.] 1. Mil. The science of projecting and directing important military movements or operations; especially, the skilful handling of masses or combinations of men not actually engaged in battle or under the direct fire of an enemy, and securing points or lines most favorable for supply, attack, defense, or retreat; the science of military position and of the combination and employment of means on a broad scale for gaining advantage in war; generalship: distinguished from tactics.

The union of Turenne's strategy with the valour and discipline which had broken down opposition at Naseby and Worcester was irresistible. GARDINER Thirty Years' War ch. II, p. 234. [S. '74.]

2. The display or exercise of skill and forethought in carrying out one's plans, schemes, etc.; the use of stratagem or artifice, as in business, politics, or society, or in games. 3. [Rare.] Style of warfare; strategic method.

It has been too often the conventional strategy of theological argument, in dealing with books or persons with whom we differ, to give no quarter. A. P. STANLEY Addresses and Sermons in Am., Pref. to Sermons p. 83. [MACM. '79.]

strath, strath, n. [Scot.] A wide, open valley, usually a river-course: distinguished from a glen. [< Gael. srath, valley.]

strath'spey", strath'spē', S. W. -spe, Wr.; strath-spē', C. I.; straths'pā, E.), n. A lively Scottish dance resembling the reel, but having a slower movement; also, the music of such a dance, or its movement. [< Strathspey, Scotland.]

But hornpipes, jigs, strathspeys, and reels, Put life and mettle in their heels.
BURNS Tam o' Shanter l. 117.

strat'ic, strat'ic, a. Geol. Same as STRATIGRAPHIC.

stra-tic'u-late, stra-tic'yu-let or -lēt, a. Geol. Having numerous thin layers, either (1) of sedimentary deposition, as by oscillation or wave-motion, often somewhat oblique to the main layers of stratification, or (2) of deposition from solution, the layers being often those of color or structure, and not of fissility, as in banded agate. [< STRATUM.]

strat"i-fi-ca'tion, strat'i-fi-kē'shun, n. The act of stratifying, or the state of being stratified. Specifically: (1) Geol. The deposition of sediments in beds or layers by any agency or process; generally by water, sometimes by wind. The evidences of stratification in a rock are, in general, the existence of continuous divisional planes of great extent, marking changes in the character of the material or the mode of deposition, and the presence of fossils generally arranged in planes parallel to the plane of deposition and with their broader surfaces lying in the same planes. Such divisions are called stratification-planes, and must be distinguished from cleavage-planes and from true foliation. An unmetamorphosed sedimentary rock generally splits most readily along the stratification-planes. (2) Physiol. Deposition of the material of a cell-wall in layers. (3) Elec. A banded or striated appearance of an electric discharge in a rarefied medium.

—strat″i-fi-ca′tion-fo″li-a′tion, n. The segregation of certain minerals in thin, irregular, discontinuous laminæ, in planes parallel to the bedding or stratification.

strat′i-fied, strat′i-faid, pa. Arranged in strata or layers; in geology, arranged, by original sedimentary or fragmentary deposition, in layers or beds, or giving evidence of having been so deposited. Stratified rocks in many instances have been so metamorphosed as to lose much of their original character.—stratified conductor (Physics), a conductor composed of alternate strips of substances with different conductivities.—s. drift (Geol.), glacial drift that has been rearranged in layers by water.

strat′i-form, strat′i-fôrm, a. Having the form of or constituting a stratum. [< STRATUM + -FORM.]

strat′i-fy, strat′i-fai, v. [-FIED; -FY′ING.] I. t. To deposit, form, or arrange in strata. See STRATIFICATION. II. i. To be formed in strata; take the form of strata.

Currents of air do not mingle, but stratify.
T. B. BUTLER Philosophy of the Weather ch. 1, p. 13. [A. '56.]

stra-tig′ra-pher, stra-tig′ra-fer, n. A student of or a specialist in stratigraphy. stra-tig′ra-phist‡.

stra-tig″ra-phy, stra-tig′ra-fi, n. Geol. 1. The order and relative position of the strata of the earth's crust. 2. The study or description of such strata; stratigraphic geology. See GEOLOGY. [< STRATUM + -GRAPHY.]

—strat″i-graph′ic, -al, a. Of or pertaining to stratigraphy.—strat″i-graph′ic-al-ly, adv.

Strat″i-o-my′i-dæ, strat′i-o-mai′i-dî or -mi′i-dê, n. pl. Entom. A family of brachycerous dipters, especially those with 3 basal cells of wings much prolonged, and veins of 2 main trunks much crowded forward.

Strat″i-o′mys, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. stratiōs, of an army (< stratos, army), + myia, fly.]—strat″i-o-my′id, a. & n.—strat″i-o′my-oid, a.

stra″to-cir′rus, strē″tō-sir′us, n. A cloud identical in general with cirro-stratus, but denser and occurring at a lower level; a thick veil of gray or bluish cloud. See CLOUD. [< STRATUS + CIRRUS.] al″to-cir′rus‡.

stra-toc′ra-cy, stra-toc′ra-si, n. Government by the military class; military despotism.

It [the Roman empire] was purely a government by the sword, or permanent stratocracy having a movable head.
DE QUINCEY The Cæsars ch. 3, p. 118. [T. & F. '54.]

[< Gr. stratos, army, + kratō, rule.]

stra″to-cu′mu-lus, strē″tō-kiū′miu-lus, n. Cloud occurring in large, dark balls or rolls, frequently covering the sky, especially in winter, and giving it at times an undulated appearance. See CLOUD.

stra-tog′ra-phy, stra-tog′ra-fi, n. A description of an army or of whatever pertains to one. [< Gr. stratos, army, + -GRAPHY.]

stra-ton′ic†, a. Of or pertaining to an army; warlike. stra-tot′ic†.

Stra-ton′ic-al, stra-ten′ic-al, a. Of or pertaining to Strato of Lampsacus (3d century B. C.), called the Physicist, belonging to the Peripatetic school. His philosophy denied the transcendence of deity and transformed Aristotelianism into pure naturalism. Stra-ton′ic‡.

stra′tose, strē′tōs or strg′tōs, a. [Rare.] Bot. Arranged in layers; stratified. [< STRATUM.]

strat′u-la, strat′yu-la, n. pl. [Rare.] Geol. Thin delicate layers in rock-strata.

stra′tum, strē′tum or strg′tum, n. [STRA′TA, less commonly STRA′TUMS, pl.] A natural or artificial layer, bed, or thickness of any substance or material, especially a nearly horizontal layer differentiated from its neighbors, as by composition or temperature.

The floor of the ocean is generally overlaid by a stratum of ice-cold water setting southward from the polar regions.
WINCHELL Sketches of Creation ch. 37, p. 404. [H. '70.]

(1) Geol. A bed of rock, consisting of all the laminæ or layers sufficiently alike or related to be thus grouped: by some geologists used synonymously with layer and bed.

The term stratum is sometimes employed to designate the whole mass of a rock, while its parallel subdivisions are called beds or layers. E. HITCHCOCK Elementary Geology § 1, p. 21. [I. & P. '54.]

(2) Anat. & Zool. A sheet or layer of tissue characterized by some special form or arrangement of structure.

stra′tus, strē′tus or strg′tus, n. A thin uniform layer of cloud at a very low level. See CLOUD.

The stratus (stratus, covering) consists of sheets of cloud, or layers of vapor, stretching along and resting upon the horizon. It forms about sunset, increases during the night, and disappears about sunrise. B. SILLIMAN, JR. Physics § 979, p. 655. [BL. & CO. '67.]

straught²†, a. Distraught; distracted.

strav′u-gant†, a. Extravagant.

stra-vage′, stra-vgj′ (stra-vēg′, C. E.), vi. [Scot.] To stroll about. stra-vaig′ or -vague′‡.—stra-vai′ger, n.

straw¹, strē, vt. To provide or bind with straw; place straw on or in.

straw², vt. & vi. [Archaic.] To strew.

Still men and nations reap as they have strawn.
LOWELL Washers of the Shroud st. 6.

straw, a. 1. Made of or stuffed with straw; as, a straw hat; straw mattress. 2. Of no value; worthless; sham; as, a straw bond; straw bail.—straw bid, a bid, as for a contract, by one who is unable or indisposed to fulfil its conditions.—s. vote, a vote taken at a chance gathering, to test the strength of opposing candidates.

straw, n. 1. A stalk, stem, or piece of a stalk or stem, of various grains, especially wheat, rye, oats, barley, and buckwheat, less frequently of peas and beans: applied generally to a dry or ripened stalk.

Those that with haste will make a mighty fire,
Begin it with weak straws.
SHAKESPEARE Julius Cæsar act i, sc. 3.

2. The stems or stalks collectively of certain grains, especially after the grain has been thrashed out: used as bedding, packing, etc. 3. Figuratively: (1) The merest trifle; as, I do not care a straw. (2) A slight circumstance or fact regarded as an indication; from the proverb "straws show which way the wind blows." 4. [Colloq.] A long clay pipe; any clay pipe. 5. Same as STRAW-NEEDLE. 6. An insect, a walking-stick. [< AS. streáw, straw, < root of STREW.] stre†.

Compounds, etc.:—Dunstable straw, wheat-straw, plaited or unplaited, for use in making bonnets.—face of s., a false show or pretense; sham; an effigy.—in the s.†, in childbed.—jack of s., an effigy made of straw; hence, a person of no consequence. jack′straw″‡.—man of s., see MAN, n.—straw′-bull″, n. A dull straw-color, as that of Manila paper.—s.-built, a. Built of straw.—s.-cat, n. The pampas-cat.—s.-cont†, n. Same as PAILLASSE, 3.—s.-color, n. A pale-yellow color, like that of clean ripe straw. See table under SPECTRUM.—s.-colored, a.—s.-cotton, n. Cotton thread for sewing straw, as in the manufacture of hats.—s.-cutter, n. A machine or device for cutting straw or hay into small pieces for use as fodder. fod′der-cut″ter†.—s.-drain, n. A drain filled with straw to keep the surrounding earth from choking it.—s.-embroidery, n. Embroidery made by sewing straw on net.—s.-fiddle, n. A xylophone having wooden bars fixed on rolls of straw.—s.-house, n. A house in which straw is stored or kept.—s.-needle, n. A long thin needle for sewing braided straw, as in hat-making.—s.-ride, n. [Colloq., U. S.] A ride for pleasure in the country in a large vehicle full of straw, on which the members of the party sit.—s.-stem, n. A wine-glass stem pulled out from the material of the bowl instead of made in a separate piece and attached; hence, a wine-glass having this kind of stem.—s.-underwing, n. A British noctuid moth (Cerigo cytherea).—s.-wine, n. Wine made from grapes dried or partly dried in the sun on straw.—s.-worm, n. A caddis.—s.-yard, n. 1. A yard or enclosed space in which straw is thrown or kept. 2. [Eng.] In London, a place of rest and shelter for destitute persons at night.—s.-yellow, n. A color resembling that of straw.—to break a s., to quarrel.—to draw straws. 1. To draw lots with straws of different lengths. 2. To droop, as the eyes; have a tendency to close (the eyes) from sleepiness.—to lay a s.†, to pause and note something.—Tuscan s., a fine yellow straw suitable for hat-making and basket-making.

Many self-explaining compounds have straw as the first element; as, straw-bound, s.-covered, s.-crowned, s.-roofed, s.-stuffed, s.-thatched.

straw′ber″ry, strē′ber″i or strē′bg-ri, n. [-RIES, pl.] 1. The fruit of any plant of the genus Fragaria, technically neither a fruit nor a berry, but an enlarged, fleshy, conical or hemispherical receptacle, bearing on its surface, and more or less embedded in it, small seed-like achenia, which are the real fruit. It is scarlet, reddish, or yellowish, and half an inch to two inches in diameter, is fragrant, and, with the exception of one species, edible, somewhat acid, and very highly esteemed.

2. The plant that bears the fruit, a stemless perennial with radical trifoliolate leaves, usually white flowers on scapes, and slender runners by which it propagates. The principal species from which the many varieties in cultivation have been derived are the European Fragaria vesca, the American F. Virginiana, and the Chilean F. Chilensis. The inedible species, from India, is ornamental (F. Indica), with leafy runners, yellow flowers, and crimson but insipid fruit. [< AS. streáwberie, < streáw, straw, + berie, berry.]

a, a section of a flower, showing the enlarged receptacle; b, a cultivated strawberry.

Compounds, etc.:—Alpine strawberry, a variety of the common wild strawberry (Fragaria vesca, var. monophylla) of England, with simple leaves.—barren s. 1. See BARREN. 2. [Eng.] A potentilla (Potentilla Fragariastrum).—dry s., same as BARREN STRAWBERRY.—Indian s., an inedible species. See STRAWBERRY, 2.—scarlet s., the Virginian strawberry (Fragaria Virginiana).—s. bass, the calico bass.—straw′ber-ry-blite″, n. A smooth annual goosefoot (Chenopodium or Blitum capitatum) whose berry-like clusters of bright-red pulpy calyces look like strawberries: found in Europe and in the northern United States and Canada, and sometimes cultivated as a flower or a culinary vegetable.—s. blond [Slang, U. S.], a red-haired person.—s.-borer, n. An insect whose larvæ burrow in the strawberry, as a weevil (Tyloderma fragariæ) that affects the crown, or a moth (Anarsia lineatella) that affects mostly the roots.—s.-bush, n. An upright or straggling shrub (Euonymus Americanus) of the United States and Canada, with rough, warty, depressed crimson pods and scarlet aril, distinguished from its congener the wahoo (E. atropurpureus) by its smaller and nearly stemless leaves. See EUONYMUS. burn′ing-bush″‡.—s.-clover, n. A hardy perennial Old World clover (Trifolium fragiferum) with prostrate stems and pale rose-colored heads of flowers resembling strawberries.—s.-comb, n. A cock's comb likened in shape to a half of a strawberry, as in the Malay breed. See illus. under COMB.—s.-crab, n. A European parthenopoid spider-crab (Eurynome aspera): named from the reddish tubercles on the carapace.—s.-finch, n. The amadavat.—s.-geranium, n. The creeping saxifrage. See SAXIFRAGE.—s.-mark, n. A soft reddish birthmark or nævus supposed to resemble a strawberry.—s.-moth, n. A moth whose larva attacks the strawberry, as the geometrid Angerona crocataria, or the smeared dagger-moth (Acronycta oblinita), which feed upon the leaves.—s.-pear, n. The bright-scarlet pear-like fruit of a cactus (Cereus triangularis) of the West Indies and tropical America, with triangular stems; also, the plant. The fruit is slightly acid, with the flavor of a strawberry.—s. perch, the calico bass.—s. roan, a. Having a roan color of a bright-red cast.—s. saw-fly, a saw-fly (Emphytus maculatus) whose larva eats small holes in the leaves of strawberries.—s.-saxifrage, n. The creeping saxifrage. See SAXIFRAGE.—s.-shrub, n. The sweet-scented shrub; calycanthus. See CALYCANTHUS; SHRUB.—s.-tomato, n. See ALKEKENGI.—s. tongue, the tongue of one suffering from scarlet fever, which, after removal of a whitish fur, becomes abnormally red and clean.—s.-vine, n. The plant that produces the strawberry.—s.-weevil, n. A minute beetle (Anthonomus signatus), injurious to strawberries in the United States by puncturing the flower-stems in order to deposit its eggs.—s.-worm, n. The larva of a strawberry-moth or strawberry saw-fly.

1. The Strawberry-weevil (Anthonomus signatus). 7/1 2. The Flower as Injured by the Weevil.

straw′ber-ry-leaf″, strē′ber-i-lif″, n. 1. The leaf of the strawberry-plant. 2. In Great Britain, a symbolic ornament indicating rank; as, the golden strawberry-leaves on the coronets of dukes, marquises, and earls; in the plural, a dukedom. See CORONET.

—strawberry leaf-roller, the larva of a tortricid moth or leaf-roller (Phoxopteris fragariæ) that folds the leaves of strawberries and feeds on their pulp.

straw′ber-ry-tree″, strē′ber-i-trī″, n. A small evergreen tree (Arbutus Unedo) of southern Europe, having dense terminal racemes of white flowers with large edible fruit resembling strawberries in shape and color: cultivated for its ornamental appearance in autumn when it is in flower and ripening its fruit of the previous year. See ARBUTUS¹. ar′bute‡.

straw′board″, strē′bōrd″, n. Coarse board, made of straw, used principally for paper boxes and book-covers.

straw′en†, a. Made of straw.

straw′ing, strē′ing, n. [Slang, Eng.] The sale of straws in streets in order to give the purchaser things forbidden by law to be sold, as obscene papers, etc.

straw′small″, strē′smēl″, n. [Eng.] A bird, the white-throat: so called because it uses straw in making its nest.

straw′smear″, strē′smir″, n. [Prov. Eng.] 1. The straw-small. 2. The garden-warbler. 3. The willow-warbler.

straw′y, strē′i, a. Pertaining to or resembling straw; consisting or made of straw.

Reclining on his strawy bed, His hand upholds his drooping head.
WHITTIER The Prisoner for Debt st. 1.

stray, strê, v. 1. i. To wander from the path or way; wander beyond limits: as, to stray off into a wood; the cows have strayed from the pasture.

The emerald edges of these silent tarns are starred with dandelions which have strayed here, one scarce knows how, from their foreign home.

-stress, suffix. A feminine termination denoting agency or occupation; as, seam*stress.* [< -STER + -ESS.]

stress, stres, vt. 1. To subject to stress, as a timber. 2. To put stress or emphasis on, as a syllable; emphasize; accent. 3. [Archaic.] To put into straits or difficulties; distress; straiten. [< OF. estressier, < L. stringo (pp. strictus), compress.]

stress[1], n. 1. Special weight, importance, or significance; as, to lay great stress on a fact.

Fichte laid all stress on the subjective, conscious ego, and the free moral will; Schelling emphasized the objective — the unconscious development of nature.
W. T. HARRIS Hegel's Logic ch. 3, p. 49. [S. C. G. '90.]

2. Force exerted to or beyond the point of strain; tension; as, to subject a faculty to the utmost stress.

He put the greatest stress he was able to put on his faculties, and urged his mind to the most concentrated and unbroken action.
GEORGE TICKNOR W. H. Prescott ch. 16, p. 213. [T. & F. '64.]

3. Influence exerted forcibly; pressure; violence; compulsion; as, stress of weather.

We are both busy reflecting, it would seem; driven to it, by quite opposite pressure — you by stress of society, and I by stress of solitude. MRS. CARLYLE in Froude's Jane W. Carlyle vol. i, letter civ, p. 314. [S. '83.]

4. In pronunciation and elocution, the relative force with which a sound, syllable, or word is uttered: in English, the main element in accent and one of the principal in emphasis; hence, in scanning, ictus.

The simple forms of stress are known as (1) radical, or initial, when the maximum of force is at the opening or beginning of the sound uttered; (2) median, or medial, when it is at the middle; and (3) vanishing, or final, when it is at the end. The combination of radical, median, and vanishing stress results in thorough stress, and the union of radical and vanishing in compound s.

5. Mech. (1) Any force or combination of forces tending to change the shape or size of a body; pressure of any kind. (2) The reaction of the interior parts of a solid body against forces tending to deform it. (3) That of which a force and its reaction are opposite aspects; a force together with its reaction, as in tension, compression, or torsion.

This law [the law that action and reaction are equal] may be called the law of stress. It teaches us that . . . every force in fact is one of a pair of equal opposite ones — one component, that is, of a stress. G. F. BARKER Physics ¶ 76, p. 71. [H. H. & CO. '92.]

—axis of stress, one of three lines such that the stress between the two sides of a plane perpendicular to it is normal to the plane. — electromagnetic s., a pressure put upon the particles of a body by reason of its being in a magnetic field. — electrostatic s., the stress in an electrostatic field which causes deformation of or strain in a piece of glass or similar substance placed therein. — homogeneous s., a stress that is the same in intensity and direction of axes in all parts of the interior of a body. — stress'di"a-gram, n. A chart showing graphically the amount and direction of the stress on each member of a bridge, roof, or other framed structure. s.-sheet‡. — tangential s., stress that tends to make the portions of a body on the two sides of a surface slide along each other; shearing-stress.

—stress'ful, a. Having great stress. — stress'-less, a. Having no stress.

stress[2], n. [Archaic.] A condition of great need; extremity; distress. [< DISTRESS.]

stretch, strech, v. I. t. 1. To extend or draw out, as to full length or width; hence, to draw tight; tighten; as, to stretch oneself; to stretch the wings; to stretch a tent.

The same act of drowsiness that stretches open our mouths, closes our ears. COLERIDGE Works, Friend in vol. ii, p. 35. [H.]

2. To extend in the direction of its length, as between two points; draw or draw out lengthwise, as in a direct line; as, to stretch a bridge-cable across a river.

Stretched and straight being really the same words, and the straight string being the stretched string. C. F. KEARY Outlines of Primitive Belief ch. I, p. 11. [L. G. & CO. '82.]

3. To draw or push out forcibly in any or more than one direction, especially beyond normal limits or size, as an elastic body; extend; distend or expand by force; force out; figuratively, to strain, or apply beyond the ordinary limits; exaggerate; as, to stretch cloth; to stretch a rubber band; to stretch a prerogative or an income; to stretch the truth; to stretch one's credit. 4. To strain or exert to the utmost; as, to stretch every nerve; to stretch one's powers. 5. To reach or put forth, as with muscular effort; extend: often with out; as, to stretch out the hands appealingly. 6. To prostrate at full length; cause to lie extended; as, to stretch an enemy on the ground. 7. [Slang.] To hang.

II. i. 1. To extend in length, in breadth, or over an area; be drawn out or expanded; spread; reach; as, a wire stretches across the street.

The staghounds, weary with the chase,
Lay stretch'd upon the rushy floor.
SCOTT Lay of the Last Minstrel can. 1, st. 2.

2. To admit of being drawn out or extended without breaking; have elasticity; figuratively, to extend or admit of extension, as in meaning or application; as, the cloth stretches; this term will not stretch to cover that meaning.

Every human institution (Justice included) will stretch a little, if you only pull it the right way.
WILKIE COLLINS The Moonstone first period, ch. 11, p. 99. [H.]

3. To extend the body or limbs with forcible or vigorous effort in order to reach or attain some object; exert or seek to exert power or influence by straining or reaching out; reach; strain: often used figuratively. 4. To extend one's body or limbs with an effort, as from weariness or laziness; as, to yawn and stretch.

Thy toils be now to chase the bounding deer,
Or view the coursers stretch in wild career.
T. TICKELL On the Prospect of Peace l. 250.

5. To walk or run with utmost length of step or stride: commonly with out. 6. [Colloq.] To go beyond the limits of truth; exaggerate. 7. Naut. To sail by the wind. [< AS. streccan, stretch.]

Synonyms: elongate, exaggerate, expand, extend, lengthen, reach, spread, strain, tighten. See PERVERT. — Antonyms: loosen, relax, slacken.

—stretch out, an order to rowers to extend themselves and pull hard. — stretch'-hal"ter†, n. One who ought to stretch a halter (be hanged). wag'-hal"ter†. — to s. a point, see TO STRAIN A POINT, under POINT, n.

stretch, n. 1. An act of stretching, or the state of being stretched; a strain or straining; tension; effort; struggle; also, capability of being stretched; elasticity; as, a stretch of the limbs; to have one's nerves on the stretch; to take the stretch out of a rope. 2. Extent or reach of that which stretches or is stretched; scope; especially, an undue extension; overstrain; as, the utmost stretch of one's powers; a stretch of jurisdiction.

Charles I. was urged to greater stretches of the royal prerogative by his evil counsellors, who subsequently reaped the due harvest of all their crimes.
C. A. BRIGGS American Presbyterianism ch. 2, p. 51. [S. '85.]

3. A continuous extent of space; an extended tract or area; a range; reach; sweep; tract; specifically, in racing, that part of the track which, being straight, admits of the greatest speed being made; as, a stretch of level road; stretches of prairie; the home-stretch.

A slumberous stretch of mountain-land.
WHITTIER In Peace l. 9.

4. A continuous extent of time, or the action or series of events that occupy it; time; spell; as, to travel ten days at a stretch. 5. Naut. The distance passed over by a sailing vessel in one tack; a tack. 6. Weaving. (1) A warp-stretching ground. (2) The length of the yarn stretched between the spindles and the drawing-rollers of a spinning-mule each time the carriage is run out. 7. A stride or bound, as of an animal in running. 8. Particular direction or course; as, the stretch of a coal-seam. 9. [Thieves' Slang.] A year's punishment, as by imprisonment; also, seven years' penal servitude.

—at, on, or upon a stretch, at a time; at one continuous effort. See def. 4, above. — on or upon the stretch, in the condition of being stretched or strained.

stretch'er, strech'ėr, n. 1. One who or that which stretches. Specifically: (1) An implement or appliance for stretching gloves, boots or shoes, or hats. (2) One of the rods connecting the ribs of an umbrella with the slider on the handle, and serving to extend the ribs. (3) A jointed piece for spreading the bows of a carriage-top. (4) A frame on which a painter's canvas is stretched by means of wedges or some similar device forced into the corners; hence, a wedge so used. (5) A wooden piece for spreading a hammock at the end.

stro'phe, strō'fi or stref'ę (XIII), n. 1. Class. Poetry. (1) A metrical form of ancient lyric poetry in which the rhythmical movements are combined into groups that are repeated one or more times. The distich is the simplest form of strophe; but the strophes of Alcæus or Sappho are usually four-lined like an English stanza, and are repeated indefinitely.

Strophe means literally 'a turning.' At the end of the strophe we turn, and repeat the same conditions. . . . Stanza, under another symbol, means the same thing.
Gummere Poetics ch. 8, p. 236. [G. & Co. '91.]

To the inheritance of the strophe, and its development into the stanza, mediæval poems . . . owe their greatest interest. H. E. Shepherd Hist. English Language ch. 12, p. 102. [E. L. H. '74.]

(2) In Greek choral poetry, the first in a pair of two such stanzas, as opposed to the second member of the pair, which is then called the antistrophe. See quot. below.

Such a system is sometimes followed by an epode, or after-song, different in rhythm from the strophe and antistrophe, the three parts constituting a trio.

(3) A movement of the chorus in an ancient drama in which they advanced while singing to the right of the stage, after which they returned, singing, to their position.

The Greek notion of stanzas was different from ours. In their poetry stanzas ran in pairs, Strophe and Antistrophe. . . . The Chorus started from the altar in the centre of the orchestra, and their evolutions took them to the right. This would constitute a Strophe, whereupon (as the name 'Strophe' implies) they turned round and in the Antistrophe worked their way back to the altar again, the second stanza of the pair getting its name because in it the rhythm, gestures and metre of the first were exactly repeated though with different words.
R. G. Moulton Ancient Classical Drama ch. 1, p. 9. [Cl. P. '90.]

2. A modern rimed stanza; by extension, one of the irregular divisions of an ode, as of Dryden's "Alexander's Feast." 3. [Rare.] Bot. A spiral or cycle in the development of leaves. [< L. stropha, < Gr. strophē, < strephō, turn.]

Stun'dism, stun'dizm, n. The doctrines or tenets of the Stundists.

Stun'dist, stun'dist, n. A member of a Russian body of Christians originating among peasants about 1860.

The movement was begun through contact of some of the serfs with certain German colonists settled in the government of Kherson, and with the new translation of the Bible into modern Russian, decreed by Alexander II in 1855 and published in 1861. Stundism was at first a movement within the bounds of the Orthodox Church, but as the Stundists rejected forms and ceremonies, and took only the Bible as their guide, they were soon subjected to persecution dating from 1867, and finally obliged to organize as a separate religious body. The body now has a membership of one to two millions, and is exerting a powerful influence.

It was from the Stundists that many of the doctrines of Count Tolstoi's New Christianity were derived, and among others, the necessity of manual labour, which they regard almost in the light of a religious act. E. B. LANIN in Contemp. Rev. Jan. '92, p. 4.

[< G. stunde, hour, lesson: from their meetings for reading the Bible.]

Subject therefore, denotes the mind itself; and subjective, that which belongs to, or proceeds from, the thinking subject. Object, on the other hand, is a term for that about which the knowing subject is conversant, . . . while objective means that which belongs to, or proceeds from, the object known, and not from the subject knowing; and thus denotes what is real in opposition to what is ideal, — what exists in nature, in contrast to what exists merely in the thought of the individual.
HAMILTON Metaphysics lect. ix, p. 111. [G. & L. '59.]

2. In literature and art, giving prominence to the subject or author as treating of his own experience or state of feeling; as, subjective poetry reveals the poet's character. 3. [Rare.] Inclined to be subject or submissive; tending to subjection; subservient; as, subjective compliance. [< L. subjectivus, < sub, under, + jacio, throw.]

Synonyms: objective. Subjective and objective are synonyms in but one point of view, being, for the most part, strictly antonyms. A mountain, as a mass of a certain size, contour, color, etc., is an objective fact; the impression our mind receives, the mental picture it forms of the mountain, is subjective. But this subjective impression may become itself the object of thought (called "subject-object"), as when we compare our mental picture of the mountain with our idea of a plain or river. The direct experiences of the soul, as joy, grief, hope, fear, are purely subjective; the outward causes of these experiences, as prosperity, bereavement, disappointment, are objective. Different individuals may receive different subjective impressions from the same objective fact, that which to one is a cause of hope being to another a cause of fear, etc. The style of a writer is called objective when it derives its materials mainly from or reaches out toward external objects; it is called subjective when it derives its materials mainly from or constantly tends to revert to the personal experience of the author. See INHERENT.

— subjective method (Philos.), the method of investigation that observes and treats realities in subordination to preconceived notions or assumptions, and constructs systems in accordance with the conceptions of the investigator rather than with the facts: opposed to the method of inductive verification. See INDUCTIVE. — s. sensation, a sensation due to stimulation of the sensory apparatus by some internal cause, as in hallucination. — s. symptoms, pathological symptoms that from their nature are discoverable by the patient alone, presenting no external indication.

sub-jec'tiv-ism, sub-jec'tiv-izm, n. 1. Philos. The doctrine that knowledge is merely subjective and relative. (1) The doctrine that we know directly no external object. (2) The doctrine that there is no objective measure of truth; relativism. 2. Same as SUBJECTIVITY, 3. 3. The subjective method; as, Descartes's subjectivism.

— sub-jec'tiv-ist. I. a. Same as SUBJECTIVISTIC. II. n. A believer in any philosophical doctrine of subjectivism. — sub-jec''tiv-is'tic, a. Relating to or imbued with subjectivism. — sub-jec''tiv-is'tic-al-ly, adv. In a subjectivistic manner or aspect.

sub''jec-tiv'i-ty, sub'jec-tiv'i-ti, n. [-TIES, pl.] 1. The state or quality of being subjective; subjectiveness; also, any element or form of psychical experience.

That excess of subjectivity — those visionary raptures and supernatural exaltations . . . are, in the eyes of these [mystical] writers, the choice rewards of sufferings and of aspirations the most intense. R. A. VAUGHAN Hours with the Mystics vol. i, bk. i, ch. 3, p. 25, note. [ALS. S.]

2. The character of existing merely as a mental representation; the non-possession of objectivity; hence, the absence of objective reality; illusiveness; also, an illusion.

3. The individuality of an artist or author as evidenced by his art. [< L. subjectivus; see SUBJECTIVE.]

sub-jec'tiv-ize, sub-jec'tiv-aiz, vt. [-IZED; -I'ZING.] To reduce to subjectivity.

sub'ject-less, sub'ject-les, a. Having no subject.

sub'ject-ness, sub'ject-nes, n. [Rare.] Subjection.

sub'ject-ship, sub'ject-ship, n. [Rare.] The state of being in subjection; the condition of being subject or a subject.

sub-jec'ture, sub-jec'chur or -tiūr, n. [Rare.] Subjection.

sub'jee, sub'ji, n. [Anglo-Ind.] Same as BHANG.

sub-jic'i-blet, a. 1. That can be brought into subjection. 2. That can be made a subject, as in predication.

— sub-jic''i-bil'i-ty†, n.

sub-join', sub-join', vt. To add at the end; write or say in addition to what has been written or said before; attach, as to a writing; affix. [< OF. subjoindre, add, < L. subjungo, subjoin, < sub, under, + jungo, join.]

The New Testament subjoins to the duty of fearing God that of honouring the king.
R. HALL Works, Sermon, Jer. viii, 6 in vol. i, p. 88. [H. '32.]

— sub-join'der, n. [Rare.] A remark following upon another by way of afterthought or reply.

sub ju'di-ce, sub jū'di-se or jū'di-cē. [L.] Still under consideration; not yet decided; under advisement; literally, before the judge.

sub'ju-ga-bl(e, sub'ju-ga-bl, a. That may be subjugated or subdued; conquerable.

sub'ju-gate, sub'ju-gēt, vt. [-GA'TED; -GA'TING.] To subdue and bring under the yoke of power or dominion; force into subserviency; conquer; subdue; hence, to make subservient in any way; enslave; as, to subjugate one's passions.

Both Scotland and Ireland, indeed, had been subjugated by the Plantagenets, but neither country had been patient under the yoke.
MACAULAY England vol. i, ch. 1, p. 50. [P. S. & CO. '49.]

Synonyms: see CONQUER; SUBDUE.

— sub'ju-ga''tor, n. One who subjugates.

sub''ju-ga'tion, sub'ju-gē'shun, n. The act of subjugating, or the state of being subjugated; subjection.

CHANNING Works, War p. 648. [A. U. A. '83.]

sub-junc'tion, sub-junc'shun, n. 1. The act of subjoining, or the state of being subjoined. 2. That which is subjoined.

sub-junc'tiv, a. & n. Subjunctive. PHIL. SOC.

sub-junc'tive, sub-junc'tiv, a. 1. Gram. Of or pertaining to that mode of the finite verb that is used to express doubtful or conditional assertion. In English the forms of the subjunctive mode are introduced by conjunctions of doubt, contingency, concession, etc., as if, though, or whether. Be and were are almost the only surviving English subjunctive forms. The subjunctive of the Germanic dialects was originally an optative. See OPTATIVE.

Our verb has long been undergoing a process of impoverishment by the obliteration of its subjunctive mood. This had begun even in the Anglo-Saxon, by the partial loss of the distinctive signs of subjunctive meaning, and the assimilation of the subjunctive and indicative forms. W. D. WHITNEY Lang. and Study of Lang. lect. iii, p. 86. [S. '67.]

2†. Subjoined to that which has been written or said. [< L. subjunctivus, < subjungo; see SUBJOIN.]

sub-junc'tive, n. 1. The subjunctive mode. 2. A verb form of this mode.

sub'king''dom, sub'king'dum, n. A primary division of the animal or the vegetable kingdom; as, the subkingdoms Protozoa, Colentera, Echinodermata, Vermes, Arthropoda, Molluscoidea, Mollusca, and Vertebrata, in zoology; the subkingdoms Cryptogamia and Phanerogamia, in botany.

sub''lap-sa'ri-an, sub'lap-sē'ri-an. I. a. Of or relating to the doctrine called sublapsarianism, held by moderate Calvinists, or to the believers in such doctrine. II. n. A believer in sublapsarianism. [< SUB- + L. lapsus; see LAPSE, n.] sub-lap'sa-ry‡.

— sub''lap-sa'ri-an-ism, n. Theol. See ORDER OF DECREES, under DECREE.

sub-late', sub-lāt', C. (sub'lāt, W.), vt. [SUB-LA'TED; SUB-LA'TING.] 1. Logic. (1) To regard and treat as untrue; deny: opposed to posit. (2) In the Hegelian logic, to obliterate by a new movement of thought. 2. [Rare.] To bear away; carry off; remove. [< L. sublatus, raised, < sub, under, + latus, borne.]

— sub-la'tion, n. The act or result of sublating. — sub'la-tiv(e, a. [Rare.] Operating or tending to take away; effecting removal or deprivation.

sub-let', sub-let', vt. 1. To let (work that one has contracted to do) to a subordinate contractor; underlet. 2. To let to another (property that one holds by a lease); sublease; specifically, in law, to transfer to another a part of one's term or interest in (all or a part of property held by a lease). The transfer of the whole term or interest in all or a part of the property is called an assignment, and in such case the lessee is said to assign his term or interest. [< SUB- + LET†, v.]

sub'le-vate†, v. To raise; stimulate. sol'le-vate†, sub''le-va'tion, n. 1. The act of upraising; elevation. 2. An uprising; a revolt; rebellion; insurrection.

sub''li-ga'tion†, n. A binding underneath.

sub-li'ma-ble†, a. That can be sublimated.

sub'li-mate, sub'li-mēt, vt. [-MA''TED; -MA''TING.] 1. Chem. To convert from a solid to a vapor by heat, and then solidify again by cooling, as for purification: a process analogous to the distillation of liquids. 2. Figuratively, to draw out from dross, as by sublimation; refine; purify; etherealize.

The doctrines of St. John were sublimated into the abstractions of Plato. C. W. SHIELDS Final Philos. pt. i, ch. 1, p. 33. [S. '77.]

sub'li-mate, sub'li-met or -mēt, a. Converted by heat into vapor, and subsequently condensed; hence, refined.

sub'li-mate, n. 1. Chem. The product of sublimation, especially when regarded as purified by the process. 2. Specifically, in mineralogy, a coating or deposit of a substance on charcoal or in a glass tube, as in blowpipe analysis, showing from its special character the nature of the substance. [< L. sublimatus; see SUBLIMATE, v.] — corrosive sublimate, see CORROSIVE.

sub''li-ma'tion, sub'li-mē'shun, n. 1. Chem. The act or process of sublimating; especially, separation of the volatile constituents of a solid, as an ore, by heating to vaporization: frequently a part of a process in which the product can be condensed and saved, but usually of one in which the product is allowed to escape.

These crystals . . . are finally purified by sublimation, that is, by converting them into vapour to condense again into the solid form. BLOXAM Chemistry, Ammonia p. 125. [P. B. & CO. '90.]

2. Hence, any refining or purifying process; elimination of base and impure elements; purification; refinement. 3. That which has undergone a sublimating process; that which has been refined; hence, the pure essence of a thing; quintessence.

'The Bridge of Sighs' . . . is the sublimation of charity and forgiveness, the compassion of the Gospel itself.
E. C. STEDMAN Victorian Poets, Hood p. 87. [H. M. & CO. '87.]

— sublimation theory, in geology, the theory that mineral veins were originally filled by the injection from molten masses below of the vapor of metallic ores which in time condensed and assumed their present conditions.

sub'li-ma-to-ry, sub'li-mā-to-ri. I. a. Made use of in sublimation; effective for sublimation. II. n. [-RIES, pl.] A vessel in which sublimation is effected. [< LL. sublimator, elevator, < L. sublimo; see SUBLIMATE, v.] sub-lime', sub-laim', vt. [SUB-LIMED'; SUB-LI'MING.] I. t. 1. To make sublime; elevate or dignify supremely.

Call it not Revenge! thus sanctified, and thus sublimed,
'Tis duty, 'tis devotion. SOUTHEY Roderick can. 3, l. 411.

2. Chem. To sublimate. 3. [Archaic.] To lift aloft.

II. i. 1. To be sublimated, as sulfur. 2. To be elevated or ennobled; become sublime. [< OF. sublimer, < L. sublimo; see SUBLIMATE, v.] sub-lime', a. 1. Characterized by sublimity; striking the mind with a sense of magnitude, power, or grandeur, physical or spiritual; awakening or fitted to awaken feelings of awe, reverence, or devotion, as for surpassing or supreme excellence or exaltation; grand; solemn; uplifting; as, a sublime sight; a sublime sacrifice; a sublime thought. 2. Exalted and preeminent for nobility of character or attainment; supreme in genius or action; majestic; noble: said of persons.

Few have guarded the purity of their native tongue with that jealous care, which the sublime Dante . . . declares to be the first duty of a poet. COLERIDGE Works, Biographia Literaria in vol. iii, ch. 16, p. 386. [H. '58.]

3. Being of the highest degree; supreme; utmost; as, a sublime sense of one's importance; sublime indifference. 4. [Poet.] (1) Of lofty bearing; haughty; proud. (2) Elevated by unusual happiness; elate. 5. Anat. Lying near the surface; superficial. 6. [Archaic.] Raised to a great height; lofty. [< L. sublimis, lofty.]

Synonyms: exalted, grand, lofty, magnificent, majestic, stately. Sublime is said of that which at once exalts and overwhelms the mind.

The beautiful attracts without repelling; whereas the sublime at once does both; the beautiful affords us a feeling of unmingled pleasure, in the full and unimpeded activity of our cognitive powers; whereas our feeling of sublimity is a mingled one of pleasure and pain,— of pleasure in the consciousness of the strong energy, of pain in the consciousness that this energy is vain. . . . The beautiful has reference to the form of an object, and the facility with which it is comprehended. For beauty, magnitude is thus an impediment. Sublimity, on the contrary, requires magnitude as its condition; and the formless is not unfrequently sublime.
HAMILTON Metaphysics lect. xivi, p. 628. [G. & L. 59.]

Majestic applies to that which makes upon the mind an impression as of the presence and bearing of a mighty sovereign. Magnificent denotes the possession at once of greatness, splendor, and richness; as, magnificent array; a magnificent sunset. See GRAND. — Antonyms: base, contemptible, insignificant, little, mean, petty, ridiculous.

— sublime anatomy, the branch of anatomy relating to superficial muscles. — s. geometry, higher geometry.

sub-lime', n. That which is sublime: usually with the definite article. Specifically: (1) A majestic style of thought or composition arising from loftiness of view and intense earnestness of purpose; the sublime characterizes the book of Job. (2) The majestic in nature or art, as distinguished from the merely beautiful.

The sublime impresses the mind at once with one great idea, — it is a single blow.
JOSHUA REYNOLDS Discourses iv, p. 111. [MCC. & CO. '91.]

(3) The sublimated and refined; hence, the ideal; also, the most intense; the utmost extreme.

This is the very sublime of folly, beyond which human dotage cannot advance. DE QUINCEY Biographical Essays, Shakspeare p. 83. [T. & F. '54.]

sub-lime', adv. [Poet.] In a sublime or elevated manner; also, far aloft.

But cawing rooks and kites that swim sublime
In still-repeated circles, screaming loud.
COWPER Task bk. i, l. 203.

sub-li'mer, sub-lai'mer, n. One who or that which sublimes; specifically, an apparatus for subliming.

sub-lim''i-fi-ca'tion†, n. The act of making sublime, or the state of being made sublime.

sub-lim'i-nal, sub-lim'i-nal, a. Being beneath the threshold of consciousness; latent: said of supposed sensations or other psychical changes so weak that we are not conscious of them. [< SUB- + L. limen (limin-), door.]

Mr. Myers is fond of ascribing genius to the uprush of the subliminal consciousness; but no uprush from subliminal regions will explain the sudden possession by a peasant girl of the technical knowledge of a master of artillery.
Review of Reviews Sept., '93, p. 310.

sub-lim'i-ty, sub-lim'i-ti, n. [-TIES, pl.] 1. The state or quality of being sublime, in any sense. Specifically: (1) The quality of anything in nature, art, or character that marks it as sublime or awakens the emotion of the sublime; grandeur or vastness of extent, duration, or power; loftiness or majesty of nature or character; extraordinary elevation of thought, sentiment, or style. Sublimity appeals to the imagination or power of artistic construction. It is the form of beauty into which the three elements of beauty enter on a scale so grand that while the unity and perfection of form are intuitively seen to be present, they are, as being too great for man's powers, only partially apprehended and grasped. See BEAUTY; CONSTRUCTION.

Beauty always has to do with form; sublimity may depend on form or on 'Unform,' a useful idiom which may cover both formlessness and deformity.
B. BOSANQUET History of Æsthetic ch. 10, p. 276. [MACM. '92.]

(2) The complex emotion arising from the perception or contemplation of that which is sublime, consisting of a pleasurable feeling of elevation, astonishment, and awe resulting from the attempt to grasp the unity and perfection of form entering into its beauty, and a painful feeling of baffled effort, powerlessness, and pain resulting from partial failure in the attempt. See quotation from Hamilton under SUBLIME, a.

The Emotion termed Sublimity is connected with vastness of Power, which sometimes takes the form of maleficent power, and sometimes of beneficent.
BAIN On Teaching English ch. 6, p. 100. [A. '87.]

2. That which is sublime.
Above, the sky, With all its bright sublimity of stars.
LOWELL Rhœcus st. 9.

sub-miss', sub-mis', a. 1. [Archaic.] Submissive.

The great works of past ages seem to a young man things of another race in respect of which his faculties must remain passive and submiss. COLERIDGE Works, Biographia Literaria in vol. iii, ch. 1, p. 149. [H. '58.]

2†. Subdued; soft; gentle; calm. [< L. submissus, pp. of submitto; see SUBMIT.]

sub-mis'sion, sub-mish'un, n. 1. The act of submitting; a yielding to the power or authority of another; obedience; hence, action in conformity with the wishes of a superior. 2. The state or quality of being submissive; the spirit of subjection or obedience; an acquiescent temper; humility and resignation or meekness.

The feeling of affection of a dog towards his master is combined with a strong sense of submission, which is akin to fear.
DARWIN Emotions ch. 5, p. 120. [A. '73.]

3. [Archaic.] Acknowledgment of error; confession of a fault. 4. Law. The act of referring, or the agreement to refer, a matter of controversy to arbitration.

The first essential of an award . . . is, that it be conformable to the terms of the submission. PARSONS Contracts vol. ii, p. 688.

[OF., < L. submissionem n., < submissus; see SUBMISS.]
Synonyms: obedience, patience, resignation, subjection, submissiveness. See PATIENCE.
—submission bond Law, an arbitration bond. See ARBITRATION.—s. of the clergy (Eng. Hist.), the agreement of the clergy in convocation that resulted in the statute of 1533 known as the Act of Submission, the purpose of which was to prevent the promulgation of fresh canons without the assent of the crown.

Specifically: (1) To sign with one's own name in order to attest the truth of a statement, to indicate the consent of the signer, to render a deed valid and operative, or to bind oneself to some engagement; as, to subscribe an affidavit; to subscribe resolutions of thanks.

I subscribed the Articles and took the oaths.
EVELYN Diary, May 10, 1637 p. 21. [F. W. & CO.]

(2) To promise to pay as a contributor to some cause or enterprise, by writing one's name beneath a written or printed pledge; loosely, to promise in any way to contribute; as, he subscribed five hundred dollars to the building-fund. 3. [Eng.] To publish by subscription; as, the Longmans are subscribing a new book of art. 4†. To write down as; characterize; as, I subscribe him a knave. 5†. To sign away; surrender.

II. i. 1. To write one's name at the end of a letter or other document in acknowledgment of being the author or writer of it.

In some of our States, the word of the statute is not 'signed,' but 'subscribed'; and where this word is used, it is said that the signature must be at the end.
PARSONS Contracts vol. iii, p. 8. [L. B. & CO. '73.]

2. To engage oneself, or to give one's formal consent, by signing any pledge, contract, deed, document, or written statement of any kind; also, to attest the execution of a written instrument by signing one's name as a witness; figuratively, to give one's assent or consent to any opinion, assertion, or proposal. 3. To pledge oneself, especially by writing, to pay a given amount of money. 4. To authorize the entry of a name on the list of those who agree to receive and pay for an article, as a periodical, an engraving, or a book sold by securing purchasers in advance of delivery. 5†. To yield; submit. [< L. subscribo; see SUBSCRIPT.]

— subscribing witness, one who subscribes his name to an instrument to attest its execution in his presence.

sub-scri'ber, sub-scrai'bər, n. One who subscribes; especially, one who assumes some obligation by subscribing; specifically, one whose name is on the subscription-list of a periodical.— the subscriber [Colloq.], the one who writes his name at the end: said by the writer of an article or the signer of a document in speaking of himself.

sub'script, sub'script, a. & n. Gr. Gram. Written beneath, as iota (ι) in the improper dipthongs ᾳ, ῃ, ῳ. See IOTA SUBSCRIPT, under IOTA. [< L. subscriptus, pp. of subscribo, subscribe, < sub, under, + scribo, write.]

sub-scrip'tion, sub-scrip'shun, n. 1. The act of subscribing; in law, the act of a person in writing his own name at the end of an instrument by way of adopting, attesting, assuming, or confirming it. 2. That which is subscribed. Particularly: (1) The matter under which one's name is written, or the paper containing it. (2) A signature written at the end of a document. (3) A signed acceptance of religious articles. (4) The individual or total sum or number subscribed for any purpose, or a paper containing an agreement to subscribe; as, the canvasser took fifty subscriptions.

Professed hospitality is often struck dumb by the arrival of a guest; and boasted patriotism, at the appearance of a proposed subscription for some beneficial public purpose.
DWIGHT Theology vol. iii, ser. xcvi, p. 117. [H. '48.]

(3) A formal agreement or undertaking, as evidenced by the signature. (6) Rom. Law. A rescript of the emperor in answer to an inquiry concerning a legal question.

Synonyms: see SERVE.

sub-serv'i-en-cy, sub-sgrv'i-gn-si, n. 1. The quality, character, or condition of being subservient.

If we consider the world in its subserviency to man, one would think it was made for our use. ADDISON Spectator May 24, 1712.

2. Hence, servility. sub-serv'i-ence‡.

sub-serv'i-ent, sub-sgrv'i-gnt, a. 1. Adapted to promote some end or purpose; being of service; ancillary. 2. Hence, acting in the interests of another; servilely following another's behests; obsequious; truckling.

Gracious to all, to none subservient,
Without offence he spake the word he meant.
ALDRICH The Sisters' Tragedy st. 5.

sub-serv'i-ent, n. One who or that which subserves.

The primitive notion that this earth was the center of the universe, and the sun, moon, and stars formed merely to be its subservients, has long since . . . given way to more rational convictions. DAVID PAGE Man, Genetic Relations p. 143. [E. & D. '67.]

subsesqui-, prefix. Chem. Having the ratio 2 : 3; more widely, having any ratio in which the consequent is greater than the antecedent by unity: in chemistry signifying a basic salt in which the relation between the acid radicals and basic radicals is as two to three. Compare SESQUI-. [< SUB- + SESQUI-.] — sub-ses"qui-al-ter'nate, a. Proportioned as two to three.— sub-ses"-qui-ter'tial, a. Proportioned as three to four.

sub-sid'i-a-ry, n. [-RIES, pl.] 1. One who or that which furnishes supplemental aid or supplies; an auxiliary; assistant. 2. Mus. A theme subordinate to or dependent on the main theme or subject.

sub'si-dize, sub'si-dāiz, vt. [-DIZED; -DI'ZING.] To furnish with a subsidy; grant a regular allowance or pecuniary aid to; encourage, partially support, or promote by a subsidy: now often with the implication of bribery; as, the French theaters are subsidized by government; to subsidize the press. sub'si-dist‡.

Divines and statesmen err . . . who would subsidize the Church for political purposes. W. R. WILLIAMS Lect. on Lord's Prayer lect. iii, p. 64. [G. & L. '51.]

sub'si-dy, sub'si-di, n. [-DIES, pl.] 1. Public Law. (1) Pecuniary aid directly granted by government to an individual or commercial enterprise deemed productive of public benefit. (2) Money furnished by one nation to another to aid it in carrying on a war against a third.

The English cabinet . . . resolved to follow a middle course between peace and war; to avoid actual hostilities with France; but to animate its enemies with hopes, and to aid them with subsidies.
LINGARD England vol. vi, ch. 1, p. 38. [E. C. '27.]

2. Eng. Hist. Formerly, an aid or tax granted by the House of Commons to the King for urgent needs of the kingdom. [< L. subsidium, < sub, under, + sedeo, sit.]

Synonyms: aid, allowance, bonus, bounty, gift, grant, indemnity, pension, premium, reward, support, subvention, tribute. A nation grants a subsidy to an ally, pays a tribute to a conqueror. An indemnity is in the nature of things limited and temporary, while a tribute might be exacted indefinitely. A nation may also grant a subsidy to its own citizens as a means of promoting the public welfare; as, a subsidy to a steamship company. The somewhat rare term subvention is especially applied to a grant of governmental aid to a literary or artistic enterprise. Governmental aid to a commercial or industrial enterprise other than a transportation company is more frequently called a bounty than a subsidy; as, the sugar bounty. The word bounty may be applied to almost any regular or stipulated allowance by a government to a citizen or citizens; as, a bounty for enlisting in the army; a bounty for killing wolves. A bounty is offered for something to be done; a pension is granted for something that has been done.

sub-sign'†, vt. 1. To subscribe or append one's signature. 2. To sign away; assign.— sub"sig-na'tion†, n. The act of subsigning; also, the signature thus written.

[< F. sucrer, < sucre; see SUGAR, n.]

—to sugar off [U. S. & Canada], to pour (concentrated maple-sugar) into molds to granulate.

sug'ar, n. 1. Chem. A sweet crystalline compound ($C_{12}H_{22}O_{11}$) derived chiefly from the juice of the sugar-cane and sugar-beet, but contained also in many other vegetables. See illus. in next column.

Sugar is called, according to its source, beet-sugar, cane-s., date-s., grapes., maize-s., maple-s., melon-s., sorghum-s., etc. In its manufacture the juice is extracted from the material, as by passing the sugar-cane through a mill, and is then treated with lime or some similar defecator and boiled, mostly in vacuum-pans, thus removing impurities and concentrating the cleansed juice. It is then allowed to stand to permit crystallization, after which the crystals are separated from the syrupy residue (see MOLASSES) by draining. The crude product, called raw or muscovado sugar, is sent to the refinery, where it is further purified by solution and filtration through animal charcoal, and boiled down in a vacuum-pan to recrystallization, yielding a refined sugar, which is dried in a centrifugal machine. It is then sold according to its condition; as, crushed s. (loaf sugar broken into irregular pieces), cut s. (loaf sugar cut into regular blocks), granulated s. (formed into grains or separate crystals by stirring while crystallizing), loaf s. (molded into a compact mass of crystals), lump s., powdered s., and pulverized s.

2. Any of many sweet or sweetish compounds, of either animal or vegetable origin, soluble in water, and whose aqueous solution rotates the plane of polarized light.

Most sugars resemble one another in their chemical and physical properties, and are fermentable. They are included among the carbohydrates, and belong to the glucose group, having the common formula ($C_6H_{12}O_6$), or to the saccharose group (including ordinary sugar), having the common formula ($C_{12}H_{22}O_{11}$). See GLUCOSE; SACCHAROSE, and table on next page.

3. Any substance resembling sugar, especially in its taste; as, sugar of lead (see LEAD). 4. Flattering words; language or conduct intended to be very grateful and pleasant to another; honeyed speech, especially if employed to disguise or soften a severe reality. [< F. sucre, < LL. succarum, < Gr. sakchar, < Ar. sakkar, < Per. shakar, < Prakrit sakkara, < Sans. çarkarā, sugar.]

Compounds, etc.:—a'corn-sug"ar, n. Same as QUERCITE.—bastard s., coarse sugar made from refuse sirup. —black s., same as LICORICE, 2.—block s., hard white sugar sawed into cubes or parallelepipeds.—brown s., raw or muscovado sugar.—confectioners' s., a highly refined sugar in impalpable powder.—gelatin-s., n. Same as GLYCOCOLL.—invert or inverted s., an amorphous substance, a mixture of dextrose and levulose, made by treating cane-sugar with a ferment or with dilute acid. Compare INVERSION.—liquid s., uncrystallizable glucose.—malado s., a sticky conglomerate sugar in which the crystalline form is broken down or hidden by a bond of invert sugar.—manna-s., n. Same as MANNITE.—maple-s., n. See MAPLE.—pine-s., n. Same as PINITE.—potato-s., n. A variety of starch-sugar.—rice-s., n. Saccharose obtained from the rice-plant.—starch-s., n. A variety of glucose made by the treatment of starch with dilute acid. corn-s.‡; potato-s.‡.—sug'ar-alm"ond, n. Same as PRALINE. —s.-baker†, n. A sugar-refiner.—s.-bean, n. A variety of a species of kidney-bean (Phaseolus lunatus).—s.-beet, n. Any one of several varieties of the common garden beet (Beta vulgaris), especially one with a white root, extensively grown in Europe for the manufacture of sugar.—s.-bird, n. 1. A bird that sucks the sweets of flowers. Diagram of Apparatus used in the Manufacture of Sugar from Sugar-cane.

The cane-carrier (1) delivers the sugar-cane to the cane-mill (2), the bagasse being taken away by the carrier (3), while the juice flows to the straining-tank (4). Thence it is pumped up to the raw-juice tank (5), from which the defecators (as 6) are supplied. The clear liquid, after defecation, is discharged into the filtering-tank (7), and the scum and other refuse is carried away by the canal (8). From the filtering-tank the juice is pumped into the first pan (9) of the three pans constituting the triple effect, and part of the water is evaporated. Thence it is led to the second pan (10), and thence to the third pan (11). In each successive pan a portion of the water is evaporated. 9 is heated by steam from the drum (12), and the vapor arising from the juice is led to 10 and supplies the heat for further evaporation. In like manner the vapor from 10 is utilized in 11. The latter is connected with the condenser (13), where the best possible vacuum is maintained. 14 is the hot-well. 15, vapor-pipe; 16, injection-pipe. 17, air-pipe. A large percentage of the water in the juice is evaporated in the triple effect, leaving the sirup, as it is then called, at 18, in a much-concentrated condition. The sirup is then clarified at 19 by boiling and skimming, and passes to the tank (20), the refuse going off in the canal (21). This clarified sirup then passes to the vacuum-pan (22), where the final evaporation takes place. When evaporated to the point of crystallization, the valve (23) is opened, and the sugar is discharged into the mixer (24), where it is stirred by revolving paddles. From the mixer small quantities are taken into the centrifugal baskets (25), say 200 or 300 pounds to each basket for each charge. The baskets are then rotated rapidly, the molasses being thereby drained quickly from the sugar, leaving clear crystals of sugar almost white in color, and ready for the refiner.

sugar-plum.—s.-sirup, n. A concentrated solution of sugar: so called in refining.—s.-squirrel, n. An Australian flying phalanger (genus Petaurus) with a long bushy tail, especially the squirrel flying phalanger (P. sciureus). See illus. under PETAURIST.—s.-teat, n. The teat of a nursing-bottle, or any other temporary constructed teat, sweetened with sugar: used for quieting restless infants.—s.-tongs, n. Tongs having a flexible spring connection between the two legs, and spoon-shaped or claw-like ends: for serving lump sugar at the table.—s.-tree, n. The sugar-maple, or the black maple (Acer nigrum), the latter being regarded by some as merely a variety of the other, and yielding sugar, though not so abundantly.—s.-vinegar, n. Vinegar manufactured of refuse juice expressed from the sugar-cane.—s.-water, n. [Western U. S.] The sap of the sugar-maple.

Synonyms: grape-sugar, glucose[1]; flesh-s., heart-s., muscle-s.[2]; milk-s.[3]; fruit-s., chylariose[4]; malt-s.[5]; ergot-s.[6]; cane-s., sucrose[7]; nest-s.[8]

sug'ar-cane″, shug'ar-kān', n. A tall, stout, perennial grass (Saccharum officinarum) of tropical and subtropical regions, the principal source of the sugar of commerce. It resembles sorghum and Indian corn in its broad, flat, linear-lanceolate leaves, in its solid culm (which, however, is much more closely jointed and is from 8 to 20 feet high), and in its terminal panicle of flowers. Its native country is unknown, but it was introduced by the Venetians about the middle of the 12th century from India into the islands of the Mediterranean, whence, through Spain and Portugal, it passed to America, where it was firmly established by the middle of the 16th century.

—African sugar-cane, see IMPHEE.—Chinese s., see SORGHUM.

sug'ared, shug'ard, pa. Sweetened or powdered with sugar; figuratively, honeyed; alluring; as, sugared speech.

sug'ar-gum″, shug'ar-gum', n. A large eucalypt (Eucalyptus corynocalyx) of South Australia and northwestern Victoria, yielding a durable timber: so called because its foliage is sweetish and attractive to cattle and sheep.

sug'ar-i-ness, shug'ar-i-nes, n. The state or quality of being sugary; sweetness.

sug'ar-ing, shug'ar-ing, n. 1. The act or process of sweetening by use of sugar. 2. Sugar or saccharine matter used for such purpose. 3. The process of manufacturing sugar.

sug'ar-less, shug'ar-les, a. Having no sugar; not sweet.

sug'ar-pine″, shug'ar-pain', n. A very large white pine (Pinus Lambertiana) of the Pacific coast of the United States. It has leaves in fives, cones 2 to 4 inches in diameter and 10 to 20 inches long, and a soft white wood resembling that of the white pine of the eastern United States but coarser-grained. It takes its name from the sweetish taste of the exudations of partly burned trees. Called also Lambert's pine, giant pine, and great sugar-pine, the last to distinguish it from the mountain-pine, which is sometimes called little sugar-pine.

sug'ar-y, shug'ar-i, a. 1. Composed of or as of sugar; sweet. 2. Having a taste for sugar or what is sweet. 3. Figuratively, honeyed; alluring.

The Dragon herself is all civility and sugary smiles. CARLYLE in Froude's Carlyle in London vol. ii, ch. 23, p. 152. [S. '84.]

sug'ar-y, n. [-IES, pl.] [Rare.] An establishment in which sugar is made; a sugar-house.

su'gent, sū'jent, a. Adapted for sucking; suctorial. [< L. sugen(t-)s, ppr. of sugo, suck.] su-ges'cent‡, sug-gest', sug-jest', W.[1] Wr.[1] (su-jest', C.; sud-jest', W.[2] Wr.[2]) (XIII), v. I. t. 1. To impart or excite, indirectly or unobtrusively, the idea of; intimate by words or signs.

The tempter, for the most part, prevails not so much by what he suggests to a man, as by what he finds in him.
R. SOUTH Sermons, 1 Cor. x, 13 in vol. ii, p. 40. [H. G. B. '70.]

2. To operate, as a thing perceived or thought of, so as to call up (something else) before the mind; bring up (an idea) by association or connection; as, the name Homer suggests the Iliad and the Odyssey. 3. To propose for the consideration of another; especially, to nominate as a suitable person or candidate; as, whom do you suggest?

The workman who first suggested the employment of soap or grease, was immediately enabled to move, without exerting a greater effort, more than three times the weight he could before.
C. BABBAGE Economy of Machinery § 5, p. 8. [KN. '35.]

4. To communicate to (a hypnotized person) by suggestion. 5†. To entice; seduce. 6†. To inform; tell.

II. i. [Archaic.] To make suggestions; excite thoughts or motives; tempt; prompt.

When devils will the blackest sins put on,
They do suggest at first with heavenly shows.
SHAKESPEARE Othello act ii, sc. 3.

Synonyms: see ALLUDE; IMPORT; INFORM.

—sug-gest'ed-ness, n. The state of being suggested.—sug-gest'er, n. One who or that which suggests. sug-gest'or‡.—sug-gest'ress, n. [Rare.] A woman suggester or tempter.

sug-gest'i-bl(e, sug-jest'i-bl, a. 1. That can be suggested; as, a suggestible motive. 2. Possessing suggestibility; easily led; yielding; as, a suggestible patient.

sug-ges'tion, sug-jes'chun, n. 1. The act of suggesting; the imparting or exciting of a notion or idea in an indirect or unobtrusive way. 2. The notion conveyed by suggesting; a hint; intimation; insinuation. 3. The spontaneous calling up of an idea in the mind by a connected idea; also, the mental power producing this action: a form of association. See ASSOCIATION, and phrases below.

Time is truly the comforter, at once lessening the tendency to suggestion of images of sorrow, and softening that very sorrow when the images arise. THOMAS BROWN Philos. of Human Mind lect. liii, p. 344. [TEGG '58.]

4. Hypnotism. The causing of some involuntary effect in a hypnotized person by an impulse from an imagination or idea induced by another person; control over a hypnotized subject by means of an idea imparted to his mind.

The subject of hypnotism is very apt to be the victim of suggestion, and to have set free that imitative instinct which we usually keep under control.
S. WEIR MITCHELL Characteristics ch. 9, p. 122. [C. CO. '92.]

5. Law. (1) The representation to a court of a fact not of record nor pleadable, but essential to the adjustment of a cause. (2) A petition presented to a court for a writ of prohibition. 6. [Archaic.] Instigation as to cruelty or crime; incitement; temptation.

The first sort by their own suggestion fell,
Self-tempted, self-depraved.
MILTON P. L. bk. iii, l. 129.

7†. Secret information; accusation; charge. [F., < L. suggestio(n-), < suggestus, pp. of suggero, suggest, < sub, under, + gero, bring.] sug-gest'ment‡. [Rare].

Synonyms: hint, innuendo, insinuation, intimation. A suggestion brings something before the mind less directly than by formal or explicit statement, as by a partial statement, an incidental allusion, an illustration, a question, or the like. Suggestion is often used of an unobtrusive statement of one's views or wishes to another, leaving consideration and any consequent action entirely to his judgment, and is hence, in many cases, the most respectful way in which one can convey his views to a superior or a stranger. A suggestion may be given unintentionally, and even unconsciously, as when we say an author has "a suggestive style." An intimation is a suggestion in brief utterance, or sometimes by significant act, gesture, or token, of one's meaning or wishes; in the latter case it is often the act of a superior; as, God in his providence gives us intimations of his will. A hint is still more limited in expression, and is always covert, but frequently with good intent; as, to give one a hint of danger or of opportunity. Insinuation and innuendo are used in the bad sense; an insinuation is a covert or partly veiled injurious utterance, sometimes to the very person attacked; an innuendo is commonly secret as well as sly, as if pointing one out for opprobrium.

Phrases:—negative suggestion, hypnotic suggestion by which sensation, mental activity, or the voluntary control of one's powers is more or less suppressed.—post-hypnotic s., a hypnotic suggestion that goes into effect some time after the original hypnotic condition has disappeared.—principle of s., association of ideas.—relative s., the capacity of feeling relations, as resemblances, differences, or proportion, when two objects or ideas are perceived: a term used formerly by associationalists, especially by Dr. Thomas Brown.—simple s., association of ideas, as distinguished from relative suggestion.—spontaneous s., the action of mental association without any action of the will.—s. on the record (Law), the entry upon the record of a case of some essential fact, as the death or insolvency of a party, which puts an end to the suit in its existing form.

sug-ges'tion-ism, sug-jes'chun-izm, n. Hypnotism. The doctrine that the control of hypnotic persons by the operator can be accounted for wholly as the result of suggestion.—sug-ges'tion-ist, n. An advocate of suggestionism.

sug-gest'ive, -ly, -ness. Suggestive, etc. PHIL. Soc.

sug-gest'ive, sug-jest'iv, a. 1. Fitted or tending to suggest; replete with or containing suggestions; stimulating to thought or reflection.

The dried-leaf rustle of her silk dress was suggestive of the ripe autumn of life. HOLMES Guardian Angel ch. 12, p. 150. [T. & F.]

Macaulay . . . is one of the most entertaining, but also one of the least suggestive, of writers.
J. C. MORISON Macaulay ch. 2, p. 44. [MACM. '82.]

su'gi, sū'gi, n. [Jap.] A tree (Cryptomeria Japonica) of the pine family, growing in northern China and Japan. It is the largest tree in Japan, attaining a height of 120 feet and a girth of 30. Its wood is easy to work, white, compact, and scented. Japanese cedar‡.

su'i-cī″dal, sū'i-sai'dal, a. 1. Pertaining to or tending toward suicide. 2. Figuratively, self-destructive; ruinous of one's own interests. su″i-cid'ic-al†.

su'i-cide, n. 1. The intentional taking of one's own life; voluntary self-destruction; self-murder.

At common law suicide imported a felonious act, and was attended with forfeiture of goods; and an attempt to commit suicide has been held to be a misdemeanor. In life-insurance, where the policy provides for a forfeiture in case of suicide, it has generally been held in the United States to mean a wilful act of self-destruction, and hence not to include self-killing by an insane person.

It must be confessed, it will be confessed: there is no refuge from confession but suicide, and suicide is confession. WEBSTER Works, Murder of Joseph White in vol. vi, p. 54. [L. B. & CO. '58.]

The suicides of each succeeding year exceed the total number killed in the bloodiest of campaigns. Every month on an average, 15,000 persons perish by their own hands.
Review of Reviews Mar., '92, p. 142.

2. Hence, figuratively, self-inflicted political, social, or commercial ruin; destruction of one's schemes or purposes by oneself. 3. One who commits the act of self-murder; a felo de se. [< L. sui, of oneself, + cædo, kill.]

suit'or, n. 1. Law. (1) One who institutes a suit in court; a party to a judicial action, generally the plaintiff or petitioner. (2) Old Eng. Law. One who attended at court; a tenant who attended his lord's court; a person bound to attend the county court; also, a plaintiff's witness. 2. One who woos a woman, or seeks her hand in marriage. 3. One who sues or makes suit in any way: one who begs a favor; a petitioner; applicant. sult'er†; su'ter†.

—suit'or-cide, a. [Humorous & Rare.] Destructive to suitors; as, the suitorcide delays of courts.—suit'ress, n. A woman suitor.

suit'y, sūt'i, a. 1. [Prov. Eng.] Uniform. 2†. Suitable.

sui"vez', swī'vā', v. [F.] Mus. Follow: usually as a direction to an accompanist to adapt his playing to the soloist both in time and in style.

su'jee, sū'ji, n. [Anglo-Ind.] 1. Fine flour ground from the heart of the wheat, used to make bread. 2. Porridge made with such flour. soo'jee†; soo'jy†.

Su'la, sū'la, n. Ornith. 1. A genus typical of Sulidæ. 2. [s.] A sea-bird of this genus. [< Ice. súla, gannet.]

sul'cate†, vt. To plow or furrow.

sul'cate, sul'ket or -kēt, a. Having long narrow furrows or channels; grooved; fluted; especially, in anatomy, having sulci. [< L. sulcatus, pp. of sulco, plow, < sulcus, trench.] sul'ca"ted‡.

—sul-ca'tion, n. 1. A system of sulci, collectively. 2. A sulcus. 3. The quality or condition of being sulcate. 4. An act or mode of grooving. —sul'ci-form, a. Groove-like; having the form of a sulcus.

sul'cus, sul'cus, n. SUL'CI, sul'sī or sul'ci, pl.] [L.] A long narrow channel or furrow; a groove; specifically, one of the minor grooves in the brain, not so large as the fissures.

su'le-a, sū lē'a, n. A threadfish (Polynemus sele) found in the Ganges and the Bay of Bengal, eaten by natives.

sulf-, ‡ Derived from SULFUR or SULPHUR: combining sulph-, ‡ forms, denoting especially, in chemistry, combination with sulfur. —sulf-ac'id, sulph-ac'id, n. A sulfur acid. See SULFUR.—sulf-am'ate, sulph-am'ate, n. A salt of sulfamic acid.—sulf-am'ic, sulph-am'ic, a. Of or pertaining to a compound derived from an amic acid of sulfuric acid.—sulfamic acid, a theoretical compound (NH_2HSO_3) known only by its salts.—sulf-am'id, sulph-am'id, n. Any one of several compounds, being amids with the hydrogen replaced by sulfur dioxid, as the compound ($NH_2.SO_2.NH_2$), formed by passing dry ammonia-gas over sulfuric chlorid (SO_2Cl_2).—sulf-am'id;† sulph-am'id:.—sulf"a-nil'ic, sulph"a-nil'ic, a. Derived from anilin by treatment with sulfuric acid.—sulfanilic acid, a crystalline compound ($C_6H_4.NH_2SO_3$) formed variously, as by mixing anilin with fuming sulfuric acid and subsequent purification.—sulf-an"ti-mo'nate, sulph-an"ti-mo'nate, n. A salt of sulfantimonic acid.—sulf-an"ti-mon'ic, sulph-an"ti-mon'ic, a. Derived from an antimonic sulfid.—sulfantimonic acid, either of two hypothetical compounds corresponding to the formulas $HSbS_3$, H_3SbS_4, known only by their salts. thiountimonic acid:.—sulf-an"ti-mo'ni-ous, sulph-an"ti-mo'ni-ous, a. Derived from an antimonious sulfid.—sulfantimonious acid, a hypothetical compound corresponding to the formula H_3SbS_3, and known only by its salts. thiountimonious acid:.—sulf-an'ti-mo-nite", sulph-an'ti-mo-nite", n. A salt of sulfantimonious acid.—sulf-ar'se-nate, sulph-ar'se-nate, n. A salt of sulfarsenic acid.—sulf"ar-sen'ic, sulph"ar-sen'ic, a. Derived from an arsenic sulfid.—sulfarsenic acid, any one of three compounds, of doubtful existence, corresponding to the formulas H_3AsS_3, H_3AsS_4, and $HAsS_4$, and known chiefly by their salts. thioarsenic acid:.—sulf"ar-se'ni-ous, sulph"ar-se'ni-ous, a. Derived from an arsenious sulfid.—sulfarsenious acid, any one of several theoretical compounds believed to corresponding to the formula H_3AsS_3, known by their salts. thioarsenious acid:.—sulf-ar'se-nite, sulph-ar'se-nite, n. A salt of sulfarsenious acid.—sulf-ar'sin, sulph-ar'sin, n. A colorless inflammable liquid compound, $(H_2)_3As_2$, having a fetid odor: a caco-dyl sulfid.—sulf-au'rate, sulph-au'rate, n. A salt of sulfauric acid.—sulf-au'ric, sulph-au'ric, a. Derived from auric sulfid: specially used to designate a hypothetical acid known by its salts. thioauric acid:.—sulf-hy'drate, sulph-y'drate, n. same as SULFOHYDRATE.—sulf-hy'dric, sulph-y'dric, a. Derived from sulfur and hydrogen.—sulfhydric acid, hydrogen sulfid.—sul'fin, sul'phin, n. Any one of several compounds of sulfur salts with hydrocarbon radicals. sul'fine:; sul'phine:.—sulfi-nate, sulphi-nate, n. A salt of sulfinic acid.—sulf-in"di-got'ic, sulph-in"di-got'ic, a. Derived from indigo and sulfuric acid. sulf"fo-in"di-got'ic:.—sulfindigotic acid, a bluish compound ($C_{16}H_8N_2O_2(SO_3)_2$) made by dissolving indigo in sulfuric acid, used as a dyestuff. Its salts, called sulfindigotates, are extensively used in dyeing. soluble blue indigo:; sulfindylic acid:; sulfocerulic acid:.—sul-fin'ic, sul-phin'ic, a. Derived from sulfin.—sulfinic acid, any of several compounds derived from hyposulfurous acid ($HSO.OH$) by substituting a hydrocarbon radical for the hydrogen of the hydroxyl: thus $HSO.OH$ becomes $HSO.O.CH_3$, methyl sulfinic acid. It is essentially an acid ether of hyposulfurous acid. sulf'in-id, sulph'in-id, n. Same as SACCHARIN. sulf'in-ide:; sulph'in-ide:.

sul'fate, ‡ sul'fēt, v. [SUL'FA'TED; SUL'PHA'TED; sul'phate, ‡ SUL'FA'TING; SUL'PHA'TING.] I. t. 1. To form a coating of lead sulfate on (the plate of a secondary battery). 2. To make (red lead) into lead sulfate by the action of sulfuric acid.

II. i. To form a deposit of sulfate, particularly of lead sulfate.

sul'fate, ‡ n. Chem. A salt of sulfuric acid. Sulsul'phate, ‡ fates are widely distributed in nature, and are important in the arts and in medicine. Among the best-known are calcium sulfate (gypsum), magnesium s. (Epsom salts), sodium s. (Glauber's salts), barium s. (barytes), and the various salts known as ritriols. See VITRIOL. [< SULFUR, SULPHUR.]

—sul-fat'ic, sul-phat'ic, a. Chem. Having the nature of or containing a sulfate.

sul'fa-tite, ‡ sul'fa-tūt, n. Mineral. A liquid comsul'pha-tite, ‡ pound found in certain volcanic regions, consisting of native dilute sulfuric acid (H_2SO_4).

sulfato-, ‡ Chem. Derived from SULFATE, SULPHATE:

sulphato-, ‡ combining forms: used to indicate that a sulfate is one of the components of certain double salts.

sul'fid, ‡ sul'fid, n. Chem. A compound of sulfur sul'phid, ‡ with an element or radical; as, hydrogen sulfid (H_2S). [< SULFUR, SULPHUR.] hy"dro-sul'fid‡; hy"dro-sul'fu-ret‡; sul'fide‡; sul'fu-ret‡; sul'phide‡.

—double sulfid, a salt consisting of two sulfids.—hydrogen s., a colorless gaseous compound (H_2S) having a characteristic odor of rotten eggs, made by decomposing certain metallic sulfids, chiefly iron, by means of acids. sulfureted hydrogen:.—metallic s., a sulfid in which the basic radical is a metal: applied chiefly to certain minerals, as iron sulfid (pyrite), zinc sulfid (blende).

sul'phi-on, ‡ *W.*2), n. Chem. A hypothetical radical (SO_2). [< SULFUR, SULPHUR.]—sul'fi-o-nid, sul'phi-o-nid, C. (sulph-i'o-nid, W.), n. Chem. A compound containing the radical sulfion; a sulfate.

sul'fite, ‡ sul'fait, n. Chem. A salt of sulfurous

sulfo-, ‡ Same as SULF-: combining forms.—sul"fo- sulpho-, ‡ ar-sen'ic, sul"pho-ar-sen'ic, a. Same as SULFARSENIC.—sul"fo-car'bon-ate, sul"pho-car'bon-ate, n. A salt of sulfocarbonic acid.—sul"fo-car-bon'ic, sul"pho-car-bon'ic, a. Derived from a compound that is essentially a sulfhydrate of carbon disulfid.—sulfocarbonic acid, a yellow oily liquid compound (H_2CS_3) with a pungent odor, formed by decomposing a metallic sulfocarbonate with hydrochloric acid. thiocarbonic acid:.—sul"fo-cy'a-nate, sul"pho-cy'a-nate, n. A salt of sulfocyanic acid. Called also thiocyanate, and formerly sulfocyanid.—sul"fo-cy-an'ic, sul"pho-cy-an'ic, a. Derived from sulfur and cyanogen.—sulfocyanic acid, a colorless bitter crystalline compound (CNHS) contained in the saliva of certain animals and in some plants, but chiefly produced synthetically, as by the action of cyanogen gas on certain sulfids. Called also hydrosulfocyanic acid, rhodanic, sulfocarbimid, sulfocyanhydric acid, sulfureted cyanic acid.—sul"fo-cy'a-nide, sul"pho-cy'a-nide, W. (sul'pho-cy-a-nide, C.), n. Same as SULFOCYANATE: formerly so called.—sul"fo-cy-an'o-gen, sul"pho-cy-an'o-gen, n. same as PERSULFOCYANOGEN: formerly so called.—sul"fo-ba"lite, sul'pho-ba"lite, n. Mineral. A vitreous, greenish-yellow, transparent sodium chlor-sulfate ($Na_{22}O_{32}S_{12}Cl_2$), crystallizing in the isometric system.—sul"fo-hy'drate, sul"pho-hy'drate, n. A salt in which the acid radical SH is combined with an element or other basic radical sulfi-hy'drate:, sul"fo-phos'phate, sul"pho-phos'phate, n. A salt of sulfophosphoric acid.—sul"fo-phos'phite, sul"pho-phos'phite, n. A salt of sulfophosphorous acid.—sul"fo-phos-phor'ic, sul"pho-phos-phor'ic, a. Derived from phosphoric sulfid.—sulfophosphoric acid, a hypothetical compound known only by its salts, as copper sulfophosphate.—sul"fo-phos'phor-ous, sul"pho-phos'phor-ous, a. Derived from phosphorous sulfid.—sulfophosphorous acid, a hypothetical compound known by its salts, as silver sulfophosphate.—sul"fo-pur-pu'ric, sul"pho-pur-pu'ric, a. Derived from a purple compound of sulfuric acid.—sulfopurpuric acid, a purple amorphous compound ($C_{16}H_{12}N_2SO_5$), analogous to sulfindigotic acid, obtained when indigo is heated with sulfuric acid: used in dyeing.—sul'fo-salt", sul'pho-salt", n. Same as SULFOSALT. sul'fo-sel':; sul'pho-sel':.—sul"fo-stan'nate, sul"pho-stan'nate, n. A salt of sulfostannic acid.—sul"fo-stan'nic, sul"pho-stan'nic, a. Derived from stannic sulfid.—sulfostannic acid, a yellow compound (H_2SnS_3), becoming dark on exposure to the air, made by decomposing an alkaline sulfostannate with a dilute acid.—sul'fo-tung'state, sul'pho-tung'state, n. A salt of sulfotungstic acid.—sul"fo-tung'stic, sul"pho-tung'stic, a. Derived from tungstic sulfid.—sulfotungstic acid, a hypothetical compound corresponding to the formula H_2WS_4 or $H_2S.WS_3$, known only by its salts, as ammonium sulfotungstate.—sul"fo-vin'ic, sul"pho-vin'ic, a. Derived from sulfuric acid and spirit of wine (alcohol).—sulfovinic acid, same as ETHYLSULFURIC ACID.

sul'fo-nal, ‡ sul'fo-nal, n. Chem. A heavy crystalsul'pho-nal, ‡ line compound ($C_2H_{16}S_2O_4$) made by oxidizing ethyl mercaptan and acetone, used as a hypnotic and anesthetic: a diethyl sulfodimethyl methane.

sul'fo-nate, ‡ sul'fo-nāt, n. Chem. A salt of sulfonsul'pho-nate, ‡ ic acid.—sul"fo-na'tion, sul"pho-na'tion, n. Chem. The introduction, as by substitution, of the sulfonic group (SO_2OH) into a compound.

sul'fone, ‡ sul'fōn, n. Chem. Any one of several sul'phone, ‡ compounds consisting of two organic radicals in combination with the radical sulfuryl and corresponding to the formula R_2SO_2: as, dimethyl sulfone, ($CH_3)_2SO_2$, or methyl ethyl sulfone, $(CH_3.C_2H_5)SO_2$. [< SULFUR, SULPHUR.]

sul'fon'ic, ‡ sul-fon'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, sul-phon'ic, ‡ or derived from sulfone.—sulfonic acid, any one of several compounds consisting of an organic radical in combination with the sulfonic radical and corresponding to the formula $R.SO_2OH$; as, ethyl sulfonic acid ($C_2H_5.SO_2OH$).—s. group, the radical (SO_2OH) regarded as a characteristic constituent of sulfonic acid.

sul-fo'ni-um, ‡ sul-fō'ni-um, n. Chem. The hypo-

sul'fur, ‡ sul'fur, vt. To fume with burning sulfur sul'phur, ‡ or with sulfurous acid, as a wine-cask before filling (to prevent acetous fermentation), or plants (to cure or prevent mildew), or a hive (to kill the bees of a colony, or to destroy worms in the honeycomb).

sul'fur, ‡ n. Chem. 1. A pale-yellow non-metallic sul'phur, ‡ crystalline element found largely native, and then crystallizing in the orthorhombic system.

Sulfur exists in several allotropic forms, of which the more important are the two crystalline modifications, one orthorhombic and the other monoclinic, both of which are soluble in carbon disulfid, and an amorphous modification that is insoluble in carbon disulfid. Sulfur in its chemical relations is the representative of oxygen, to which it is equivalent, atom to atom. The two elements, though very dissimilar in their ordinary physical characters, correspond very closely in the nature of the compounds which they form, and in the properties they exhibit when both are in the gaseous state. Sulfur is used in the arts in making gunpowder, matches, vulcanized rubber, and sulfuric acid, and also in medicine, especially in skin-diseases. Pliny says that when sulfur is burned in darkness it gives the faces of the attendants the pallor of death; hence it was used in certain religious ceremonies, and called thion (hence, thionic acids). In alchemy it was regarded as an elementary principle, the others being salt and mercury. See def. 4.

The great repositories of sulphur are either beds of gypsum and the associate rocks, or the regions of active and extinct volcanoes. In the valley of Noto and Mazzaro, in Sicily; . . . [and, Cracow, in Poland, it occurs in the former situation. . . . Sicily and the neighboring volcanic isles; the Solfatara, near Naples; the volcanoes of the Pacific Ocean, e. g., Kilauea on Hawaii, etc., are localities of the latter kind. DANA Mineralogy p. 9. [W. & S. '92.]

2. A yellowish pieridine butterfly; as, the common North-American clouded sulfur (Colias philodice); the cloudless sulfur (Callidryas eubule). 3. Art. (1) A cast in relief of an engraved plate taken in melted sulfur. (2) An impression from such a cast. Engravings on plate, paxes, and the like were thus reproduced in the 16th century. 4. In medieval theosophy, one of the three principles representing, in the Godhead, the Son; in nature, cause; and in man, motive power. 5. Mining. (1) Iron pyrites. (2) Sulfureted hydrogen; sometimes, carbureted hydrogen. 6†. Lightning: formerly regarded as composed of this substance. [< L. sulfur, the usual spelling, also sulphur, as if GR.]

—Phrases, etc.:—amorphous sulfur, a variety of sulfur devoid of crystalline form, that is insoluble in carbon disulfid and is obtained by boiling sulfur with milk of lime. —flowers of s., a light-yellow pulverulent modification of sulfur formed when the vapor of sulfur is condensed.—roll s., sulfur that has been purified and cast into rolls or sticks: a commercial name.—ruby s. (Mineral.), same as REALGAR.—soft s., a plastic variety of amorphous sulfur formed when viscid melted sulfur is poured into water.—stick s., same as ROLL SULFUR.—sublimed s., same as FLOWERS OF SULFUR.—s. acid, an acid in which the acid radical is a sulfid, as sulfocarbonic acid (K_2CS_3) as contrasted with hydrocarbonic acid (H_2CO_3).—s. alcohol, same as MERCAPTAN.—s. auratum, a yellowish-red antimonic sulfid used in medicine. golden sulfid of antimony†. —s. balsam, balsam of sulfur. See BALSAM.—s. base, a sulfid of the alkaline metals that acts as a base.—sul'fur-burn"er, n. A blast-furnace in which sulfur is burned, as in the manufacture of sulfuric acid.—s. dioxid, a colorless gaseous compound (SO_2) that has the peculiar suffocating odor of burning sulfur, and is formed when sulfur is burned in air. It is now sold in liquid form. sulfurous anhydrid‡; sulfurous oxid‡.—s. ether, an ether in which sulfur replaces the oxygen contained in the hydroxyl group. Compare ETHER, 1.—s. group, the elements sulfur, selenium, tellurium, and oxygen: formerly classed together owing to their many properties in common.—s. ointment, a mixture of sulfur and benzoinated lard: used as an ointment.—s. ore, n. Mineral. Same as PYRITE.—s.-rain, n. Same as POLLEN-RAIN. s.-shower†.—s. salt, a salt in which the acid radical is a sulfid in lieu of an oxid. sul'fo-salt"‡; sul'pho-sel‡.—s. trioxid, a white opaque crystalline compound (SO_3) formed by combining sulfur dioxid and oxygen gases in a heated tube containing metallic oxids. It unites with water and forms sulfuric acid. sulfuric anhydrid:.—s. waters, n. pl. Natural-spring waters charged with hydrogen sulfid.—s. whale, n. The sulfurbottom.—s. yellow, n. See YELLOW.—vegetable s., same as LYCOPODIUM, 2.

sul'fu-rate, ‡ sul'fu-rēt, vt. [-RA'TED; -RA'TING.]

sul'phu-rate, ‡ To bleach, as straw hats, with fumes of burning sulfur or with a solution of sulfurous acid.

sul'fu-rate, ‡ sul'fu-ret or -rēt. Chem. 1. a. Comsul'phu-rate, ‡ posed of or resembling sulfur; sulfureous: as, a sulfurate color. II. n. Same as SULFID: a disused term. [< L. sulfuratus, < sulfur, sulfur.]

sul"fu-ra'tion, ‡ sul'fu-rē'shun, n. 1. The act or sul"phu-ra'tion, ‡ process of combining, impregnating, or saturating with sulfur or its compounds. 2. The state or result of being so treated. sul"fu-ri-za'tion‡; sul"fu-ri-sa'tion‡.

sul'fu-ra"tor, ‡ sul'fu-rē'tgr, n. An apparatus by sul'phu-ra"tor, ‡ means of which sulfuration is accomplished: usually the apparatus in which fabrics are bleached by exposure to the fumes of sulfur.

sul'fur-bot"tom, ‡ sul'fur-bot'um, n. A balænopsul'phur-bot"tom, ‡ terine whale (Sibbaldius sulfureus) having a yellowish belly and attaining a length of about 100 feet; also, a related species, as the silverbottom.

sul"fu-re'i-ty†, ‡ n. The condition of being sulfure-

sul-fu're-ous, ‡ sul-fū're-us, a. 1. Of, pertaining sul-phu're-ous, ‡ to, or having the properties of sulfur; especially, having the odor and pungency of the fumes of burning sulfur or the lurid blue color of its flame. 2. Bot. Sulfur-colored; of a pale yellow like sulfur. [< L. sulfureus, < sulfur, sulfur.]

sul'fu-ret, ‡ sul'fu-ret, n. Chem. 1. A sulfid: in sul'phu-ret, ‡ disuse. 2. pl. Certain undecomposed metallic sulfids, especially gold-bearing pyrites.

sul'fu-ret"ed, ‡ sul'fu-ret'ed, a. Chem. Saturated, sul'phu-ret"ed, ‡ impregnated, or chemically combined with sulfur; as, sulfureted hydrogen (hydrogen sulfid). sul'fu-ret"ted‡; sul'phu-ret"ted‡.

sul-fu'ric, ‡ sul fū'ric, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, sul-phu'ric, ‡ or derived from sulfur, especially in its higher valence.

—fuming sulfuric acid, a brownish corrosive liquid mixture of sulfuric acid and sulfur trioxid ($H_2SO_4.SO_3$) made by distilling iron sulfate. Nordhausen acid:; Nordhausen oil of vitriol:.—s. acid, a colorless, exceedingly corrosive, oily liquid compound (H_2SO_4), essentially a combination of sulfur trioxid and water: perhaps the most important chemical compound used in the arts, being extensively employed in the manufacture of soda, in that of bleaching-powder, in calico-printing and -dyeing, and in almost all chemical operations, either in the manufactory or in the laboratory. It was originally made by distilling iron sulfate (green vitriol), hence the popular name oil of vitriol. Later it was made from sulfur itself, and more recently from certain mineral sulfids. Sulfur dioxid (SO_2) is generated by burning the sulfur or sulfid in air, while at the same time nitrogen tetroxid (N_2O_4) is generated by decomposing sodium nitrate with sulfuric acid and heat. The two gases are caused to react with steam in leaden chambers. The resulting sulfuric acid, which at this stage is called chamber acid, and has a specific gravity of 1.35 to 1.62, is further concentrated in glass or platinum stills until a density of 1.84 is reached. The commercial value of sulfuric acid is largely due to its energy in attacking and decomposing almost everything with which it comes in contact. It readily dissolves most metals, decomposes most salts, forming sulfates, absorbs moisture, being thus valuable as a desiccating or dehydrating agent, and chars nearly all animal and vegetable substances, whence its use in making shoe-blacking.—s. anhydrid, same as SULFUR TRIOXID. See SULFUR.—s. ether, ordinary or ethyl ether: a name due to the use of sulfuric acid in its manufacture, though it contains no sulfur. See ETHER, n., 1.

sulk[2]†, vt. To plow.

sulk†, a. Slow; dull; specifically, slow to sell.

sulk[1], n. A sulky mood or humor: often in the plural; as, the child is in a sulk; a fit of the sulks.

Men are certainly as much given to ill temper as women; and, if they are less inclined to tears, they make it up in sulks, which are just as bad. T. W. HIGGINSON Common Sense about Women ch. 19, p. 74. [L. & S. '82.]

sulk[2]†, n. [Rare.] A furrow.

sulk'er, sulk'ėr, n. One who sulks or is given to sulking.

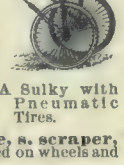
sulk'y, sulk'i, a. [SULK'I-ER; SULK'I-EST.] 1. Showing ill feeling or resentment by keeping aloof from others or by refusing to speak or act; sullenly cross; silently and doggedly ill-humored.



The immediate region had flashed during the civil war, and remained sulky still. E. S. PHELPS in Century Mag. Dec., '90, p. 301.

2. Of tardy growth; stunted; undeveloped: said of plants. [< SULKINESS, < AS. solcenes, < solcen, languid.]

—sulk'i-ly, adv.—sulk'i-ness, n.

sulk'y, n. [SULK'IES, pl.] A light two-wheeled one-horse vehicle seating but one person: sometimes without a body. Called, according to its use or construction, road-sulky, racing-s., skeleton s.

A Sulky with Pneumatic Tires.

Oh, that narrow sulky! What hopes, what fears, what comfort, what anguish, what despair, in the roll of its coming or its parting wheels!
HOLMES Elsie Venner ch. 10, p. 177. [H. M. & CO. '84.]

[< SULKY, a. (because only one can ride in it).] pneumatic sulky, a sulky having pneumatic rubber tires.—sulky cultivator, s. harrow, s. plow, s. rake, s. scraper, etc., a cultivator or other implement mounted on wheels and furnished with a single seat for the driver.

sum'thing, sun. Something, son. PHIL. SOC.

sun, sun, n. [SUNNED; SUN'NING.] I. t. To expose to the light or heat of the sun; warm by the sun; as, to sun oneself.

II. i. 1. To bask in or be exposed to the sun's rays; be warmed by the heat of the sun.

And riseth up a meadow fair that sunning sea-gulls love.
MORRIS Æneids of Virgil bk. v, l. 128.

2. To shine like the sun.

sun[1], n. 1. The heavenly body that is most conspicuous from the earth, being the center of attraction and the main source of light and heat in the solar system; regarded by astronomers as a star.

The sun's mean distance from the earth is nearly 93,000,000 miles, and its diameter 866,500 miles. The surface is 12,000 and the volume 1,300,000 times that of the earth, but the mass is only 332,000 times as great, so that the density is only about one-quarter that of the earth. The period of rotation is 25.3 days at the equator, 25.8 days at latitude 20°, 27.0 days at latitude 40°, as determined by the movement of sun-spots, though recent determinations show that there is a peculiar surface-drift in the sun-spot belts. The sun's surface, the photosphere, has a gray background thickly covered with granular or cloud-like forms called nodules or rice-grains. It is indented at certain latitudes within the belt included between the 40th parallels of north and south latitude by irregular spots. (See SUN-SPOT.) Above this layer comes the chromosphere, in the midst of which is the reversing layer where the Fraunhofer's lines are supposed to originate. Explosive projections of the lower material into fantastic shapes cause the prominences, distinguished as quiescent or metallic according to their character. The faculæ (see FACULA) are found in all parts of the sun, especially around the spots, and seem to be highly attenuated condensations like clouds. Beyond all these, extending to great visible distances, is the corona, observed only during total eclipses. (See CORONA.) The material of the sun, as revealed by the spectrum, has many of the chemical elements known on the earth, and others not known to have counterparts here. It is generally believed that the sun has an influence on terrestrial magnetism, and facts have been adduced to show that the polar magnetic field of the sun, following the stream-lines visible in the corona, reaches the earth and there affects the earth's magnetism.

2. Any star that is the center of a system revolving around it, as Sirius; also, either of the components of a double star.

> Let earth, unbalanced, from her orbit fly, > Planets and suns run lawless through the sky.
> POPE Essay on Man ep. i, l. 252.

3. The light and heat radiated from the sun; sunshine; as, let us sit for a while in the sun.

> The spinsters and the knitters in the sun . . . Do use to chaunt it.
> SHAKESPEARE Twelfth-Night act ii, sc. 4.

4. Figuratively, anything brilliant and magnificent, or that is a source of splendor; a glorious or resplendent object; as, Christ is the sun of righteousness.

> Hancock and Adams, through the smoke and flames of the 19th of April, beheld the sun of their country's independence arise, with healing in his wings. E. EVERETT Orations and Speeches, Battle of Lexington in vol. i, p. 520. [A. S. CO. '36.]

5. [Poet.] The time of the earth's revolution round the sun; a year. 6. The daily appearance or daily shining of the sun; a day; also, the time of its appearance or shining; sunrise; as, twenty suns ago; wait not for tomorrow's sun. 7. Her. The sun's disk, sometimes represented as a human face environed by rays alternately straight and wavy: usually described as proper, or in its glory or splendor (surrounded by wavy rays), and commonly blazoned or unless otherwise specified. See illus. under HURST. 8. A concentric group of lamps, usually incandescent, under a reflector, for strong downward illumination. sun'-burn"er‡. [< AS. sunne, sun.]

su-pe'ri-or, n. 1. A person of more exalted rank or dignity than another or others; also, one who surpasses others in any excellent quality, characteristic, or trait.

It is a matter of the simplest demonstration, that no man can be really appreciative but by his equal or superior. RUSKIN Modern Painters vol. i, pt. i, ch. 1, p. 2. [W. & S. '58.]

The more refined we become the more delicate is our sense of what is due to our superiors, and the more ready are we to pay them their due. PHELPS in Elizabeth S. Phelps's Austin Phelps, Letters p. 345. [S. '91.]

2. The presiding officer or ruler of an ecclesiastical order or house, as an abbey, convent, or monastery. 3. Print. A superior letter or character. See SUPERIOR, a., 4 (4). 4. Law. The grantor of a feudal tenure to be held of himself; specifically, in Scots law, one who has made an original grant of heritable property to a tenant, called the vassal, on condition that he pay an annual rent or perform certain services.

Synonyms: see SUPERINTENDENT.

—su-pe'ri-or-ess, n. The superior of a convent or nunnery: more generally called lady superior.

su-pe"ri-or'i-ty, siu-pī"ri-or'i-ti, n. 1. The state of being superior, as in quality, capability, rank, dignity, or attainment; preeminence; surpassing excellence; as, the superiority rests with him. 2. Scots Law. The right of the lord in the lands held by the vassal. [< F. supériorité, < LL. superioritat(t)s, < L. superior, compar. of superus, upper, < super, over.] su-pe'ri-or-ness‡ [Rare].

Synonyms: see ADVANTAGE; PRECEDENCE.

su-pe'ri-us, siū-pī'ri-us or -pē'ri-us, n. [LL.] In medieval music, the soprano part.

su-per'la-tiv, -ly, -ness. Superlative, etc. PH. S.

su-per'la-tive, siu-pĕr'la-tiv, a. 1. Raised or elevated to the highest degree; of supreme excellence or eminence; consummate; as, superlative loveliness. 2. Gram. Expressing or involving the highest degree: said of a form of comparison of adjectives or adverbs; as, the superlative degree of wise is wisest. See COMPARISON.

su-per'la-tive, n. 1. That which is of the highest possible excellence or eminence, or is superior to all other things with which it is naturally compared. 2. Gram. (1) The highest degree of comparison of the adjective or adverb: formed in English either (a) by adding -st, -est, to the positive; as, brightest, ablest; (b) by prefixing the word most (or least) to the positive, which is done especially with words of more than two syllables; as, most delightful; (c) by prefixing an adverb of superlative meaning, as very, extremely, exceedingly, to the positive; as, very kind. The first two are called the superlative relative; the last the s. absolute (without comparison): opposed to comparative, positive.

A kind of superlative is also sometimes formed with the suffix -most from words that do not distinguish any positive and comparative; for example, mid*most*, under*most*, northern*most*, south*most*, top*most*.

Superlatives are diminutives, and weaken; . . . the positive is the sinew of speech, the superlative the fat. EMERSON Lect. and Biograph. Sketches, The Superlative p. 160. [H. M. & CO. '89.]

(2) Any word or phrase in the superlative degree; as, a speaker fond of exaggerations and superlatives.

It is very disingenuous to talk scandal in superlatives, as though every man who is a sinner was a perfect villain. J. A. JAMES Young Man's Friend, Defective Amiability p. 101. [C. & BROS. '79.]

su-pern', a. Being above; heavenly; supernal.

su"per-nac'u-lar, siū"pĕr-nac'yu-lar, a. Having the quality of supernaculum; very choice: said of liquors.

su"per-nac'u-lum, siū"pĕr-nac'yu-lum, n. Wine worthy of consumption to the last drop; liquor of the choicest quality; hence, anything of extraordinary excellence. [< SUPER- + G. nagel, nail.]

And empty to each radiant comer
A supernaculum of summer.
LOWELL Eurydice st. 1.

su"per-nac'u-lum, adv. So that no liquor remains; literally, 'on the nail,' from an old custom of concluding a drink by reversing the glass and showing that no more was left than would rest on the thumb-nail.

su-per'nal, siu-pĕr'nal, a. 1. Of or pertaining to things above this world; heavenly; celestial.

The word God suggests a thousand deities supernal and infernal, but certainly not the God of the Bible, for alas! they know Him not. J. L. NEVIUS China ch. 22, p. 348. [H. '69.]

2. Placed or located above; lofty; overhead. [< L. supernus, < super, over.]

su"per-na'tant, siū"pĕr-nē'tant, a. Floating uppermost or above something: said especially in chemistry of the liquid from which a precipitate has been thrown down.

Decant the supernatant liquid. ELIOT AND STORER Qualitative Chem. Analysis pt. i, ch. 4, p. 34. [V. N. & CO. '79.]

su"per-na-ta'tion†, n. Flotation on a liquid surface.

su"per-na'tion-al, siū"pĕr-nash'un-ăl, a. Transcending the national and the international, and belonging to the individual and to humanity, independently of all national consideration.—su"per-na'tion-al-ism, n. The theory of the supernational.

su"per-nat'u-ral, siū"pĕr-nach'u-rul or -nat'yu-rul, a. 1. Existing or taking place through some agency above the forces of nature; being outside of the range or operation of natural law, whether psychical or physical; caused miraculously or by the immediate exercise of divine power. Compare NATURAL; PRETERNATURAL.

It was something altogether supernatural; as when God said, Let there be light, and there was light. C. HODGE Systematic Theology vol. i, intro., ch. 6, p. 160. [S. '72.]

2. Of or pertaining to the supernatural.

The grandest of English supernatural creations is Milton's Satan. STEDMAN Nature of Poetry ch. 7, p. 245. [H. M. & CO.]

3. R. C. Theol. Transcending the powers and exigencies of any created nature. An act is modally supernatural when it is within the range of natural desires, but requires for its performance a power above nature: such is the resurrection of the flesh. It is intrinsically or substantially s. when it has for its final object salvation, and the intuitive vision of the divine essence.

4. Loosely, being or occurring out of the ordinary natural course of things. [< OF. supernaturel, < LL. supernaturalis, < L. super, above; and see NATURAL, a.]

Synonyms: miraculous, preternatural, superhuman. The supernatural (super, above) is above or superior to the recognized powers of nature; the preternatural (preter, beyond) is aside from or beyond what we have been accustomed to regard as the result of natural law, often in the sense of inauspicious; as, a preternatural gloom. Miraculous is more emphatic and specific than supernatural, as referring to the direct personal intervention of divine power. Some hold that a miracle, as the raising of the dead, is a direct suspension and even violation of natural laws by the fiat of the Creator, and so is supernatural; others hold that the miracle is simply the calling forth of a power residing in the laws of nature, but not within their ordinary operation, and dependent on a distinct act of God, so that the miraculous might be termed "extranatural," rather than supernatural. All that is beyond human power is superhuman; as, prophecy gives evidence of superhuman knowledge; the word is sometimes applied to remarkable manifestations of human power, surpassing all that is ordinary.—Antonyms: common, natural, ordinary, usual.

su"per-nat'u-ral, n. That which is outside the range of the accepted course of nature; that which transcends nature and includes the Creator together with those forms of being (existences or activities) collectively that are special manifestations of his will or power outside, or apparently outside, of the sphere of natural law: with the definite article. See scheme below, and compare BEING; NATURE.

SYSTEM OF THE SUPERNATURAL FROM THE ORDINARY CHRISTIAN STANDPOINT.

		Phenomena.	Law.
Kingdoms or Spheres.	God, the foundation of the Supernatural.....	Infinite, absolute, free, spiritual personality, as Trinity.	Freedom and perfection.
	Creation.....	Origination of matter, worlds, organisms, and finite spirits, angelic, human, etc., and elevation of nature by grace.	Freedom and perfection + power, wisdom, and goodness.
	Providence..	Provision, prearrangement, government, moral government, judgment.	Freedom and perfection + power, wisdom, and goodness + justice.
	Redemption, by cooperation of the Trinity.	The Father:—originating the plan of redemption. The Son:—effecting redemption—in connection with the chosen people and the church, prophecy and miracle, and in his incarnation and redemptive work and universal reign. The Holy Spirit:—applying redemption—in the illumination, regeneration, sanctification, and glorification of the saved, and in all spiritual enlightenment.	Freedom and perfection + power, wisdom, and goodness + justice + grace.

su"per-nat'u-ral-ism, siū"pĕr-nach'u-rul-izm or -nat'yu-, n. 1. The quality of being supernatural. 2. Theol. & Philos. Belief in the supernatural; especially, the doctrine that a Supreme Being exists who originated and who now controls the forces of nature, who can work miracles and answer prayer, and who regulates all the affairs of the universe by a superintending and interposing providence: opposed to naturalism.

Supernaturalism is a term which includes the idea of God. GLADSTONE Impregnable Rock ch. 7, p. 255. [I. & CO. '90.]

su"pra-nat'u-rai-ism‡.

su"per-nat'u-ral-ist, siū"pĕr-nach'u-rul-ist or -nat'-yu-. I. a. Of or pertaining to the supernatural. II. n. A believer in the supernatural. su"pra-nat'u-ral-ist‡ [Incorrect form].—su"per-nat"u-ral-is'tic, a. Pertaining to, characteristic of, or tending toward supernaturalism.

su"per-nat"u-ral'i-ty, n. [Rare.] The quality or state of being supernatural. su"per-nat'u-ral-ness‡.

su"per-nat'u-ral-ize, siū"pĕr-nach'u-rul-iz or -nat'-yu-, vt. To introduce into the sphere of the supernatural; render or regard as being supernatural.

God must enter the mind, before our motives can be supernaturalized. E. M. GOULBURN Thoughts on Personal Religion pt. iii, ch. 2, p. 172. [A. '64.]

su"per-nu'mer-a-ry, siū"pĕr-niū'mer-ĕ-ri, a. Being beyond a fixed or standard number; also, beyond a customary or necessary number; superfluous. [< LL. supernumerarius, < L. super, over; and see NUMERARY.]

As . . . many of those regiments are reduced to little more than a large company, I recommend the discharge of all the supernumerary officers. WASHINGTON in Sparks's Writings of Washington, Nov. 10, 1776 in vol. iv, p. 169. [H. G. & CO. '34.]

su"per-nu'mer-a-ry, siū"pĕr-niū'mĕr-ē-ri, n. [-RIES, pl.] A person or thing in excess of the regular, necessary, or customary number. Specifically: (1) A stage performer without any speaking part: a term commonly restricted to male performers, female performers of the same grade who are not coryphées or choristers being usually styled "extra ladies." Often contracted to super, and occasionally to supe.

In the world's theatre the man who is really playing the leading part . . . is too often . . . accounted but one of the supernumeraries. BIRRELL Obiter Dicta, Actors first series, p. 124. [S. '85.]

(2) Mil. An officer attached to a regiment or corps in which no vacancy exists.

su"per-o-lat'er-al, siū"pĕr-o-lat'ĕr-ul, a. Situated above and at the side. [< SUPER- + LATERAL.]

su"per-o-mar'gin-al, a. Same as SUPRAMARGINAL.

su"per-or'di-nate, siū"pĕr-ôr'di-nĕt or -nēt, a. 1. Zool. Of superior rank in the same scientific classification; bearing the relation of a superorder to an order. 2. Logic. Related as the generic to the specific or the particular included under it.

su"per-or"di-na'tion, siū"pĕr-ôr"di-nē'shun, n. 1. The ordination of a person to an office not yet vacant; particularly, the ordination of a successor by an ecclesiastic during his own tenure of office. 2. Logic. The relation of a universal statement to the particular statement that it includes or justifies; opposed to subordination. [< LL. superordination(n-), < superordino, add to, < L. super, over; and see ORDAIN.]

su"per-or-gan'ic, siū"pĕr-ôr-gan'ic, a. 1. Not effected by the structure or activities of the organism; superadded to the organic; hence, psychical. 2. Belonging to society regarded as a higher organism than the individual.

su"per-os'cu-late, siū"pĕr-es'kiu-lêt, vt. Math. To touch at more consecutive points than are usually needed to determine the locus of a given order.

su"per-phos'phate, siū"pĕr-fes'fêt, n. Chem. An orthophosphate, as that of calcium, in which only a portion of the replaceable hydrogen of the original orthophosphoric acid has been substituted by a basic radical.

—superphosphate of lime, a soluble compound ($CaH_4(PO_4)_2$) made by heating calcium orthophosphate ($Ca_3(PO_4)_2$) with sulfuric acid: used extensively as a fertilizer.

su"per-pose', siū"pĕr pōz', vt. To lay over or upon something else, as one layer upon another; specifically, in geometry, to suppose (a figure) to be placed upon another. See SUPERIMPOSE; SUPERPOSITION. [< F. superposer, < L. super, over; and see POSE[1], v.]

—su"per-po'sa-bl(e, a. That can be superposed; superimposable.—su"per-posed', pa. Placed directly over some other part or organ, as buds or flowers on a stem, or stamens opposite the petals.

su"per-po-si'tion, siū"pĕr-po-zish'un, n. The act of superposing, or the state of being superposed. Specifically: (1) Bot. Same as ANTEPOSITION. (2) Geom. The act of supposing one figure to be taken up and laid upon another so as to demonstrate that they are or are not equal, by showing that they do or do not coincide perfectly. (3) Elect. A fast superimposed upon another; the continuation or extension of a fast. (4) Geol. (a) The original relative position of strata, each newer formation overlying the next older one in any locality. (b) Superimposition.

In the Sidney coal-field fifty-nine fossil forests . . . occur in superposition. DRAPER Intell. Devel. Eur. vol. ii, ch. 9, p. 308. [H.]

[< LL. superpositio(n-), < L. superpono, place over, < super, over, + pono, place.]

—apparent superposition, the actual or visible order in which strata lie in any locality. In case of overturn this is a false s., as the older rocks have been thrust over the newer ones.—law of s., the law that underlying must be older than overlying strata where there has been neither inversion nor overthrust. Upon this law all geological chronology is based.

su"per-sat'u-rate, siū"pĕr-sach'u-rêt or -sat'yu-rêt, vt. To saturate to excess or beyond the normal point; cause to contain more of something, as of a dissolved substance or of magnetism, than can be held under normal conditions.

It takes a long time to change a whole language supersaturated with heathen ideas, and impregnate it with Christian thought and feeling. H. W. WARREN in The Independent [New York] Jan. 12, '93, p. 1, col. 2.

—supersaturated solution (Chem.), the solution of a salt in a liquid carried beyond the normal degree of saturation. A slight jar or the addition of more salt to such a solution will suddenly produce crystallization.

Supersaturated solution of sodium acetate is used in railway foot-warmers, where the heat evolved in the crystallisation renders it four times as efficacious as the same volume of hot water. BLOXAM Chemistry ¶ 38, p. 44. [P. B. & CO. '90.]

su"per-sat"u-ra'tion, siū"pĕr-sach'u-rê'shun or -sat'yu-, n. The act or process of supersaturating, or the state of being supersaturated; specifically, the state of the air when it contains an amount of moisture more than sufficient to saturate it, as in a fog.—magnetic supersaturation, the state of having received more magnetism than can be retained for any considerable time.

su"per-scribe', siū"pĕr-screib', vt. [-SCRIBED'; -SCRI'BING.] To write or engrave on the outside or on the upper part of; inscribe with a name or address; furnish with an inscription; specifically, to address or direct, as a letter. [< L. superscribo; see SUPERSCRIPT.]

su'per-script, siū'pĕr-script. I. a. [Rare.] Written above or overhead: opposed to subscript. II†. n. Same as SUPERSCRIPTION. [< L. superscriptus, pp. of superscribo, write over, < super, over, + scribo, write.]

su"per-scrip'tion, siū"pĕr-scrip'shun, n. 1. The act of superscribing. 2. An upper or outer inscription, as a title or a direction; especially, an address on a letter.

Whose is this image and superscription? And they said unto him, Cæsar's. Mark xii, 16.

3. Pharm. That portion of a medical prescription that begins with the word recipe (generally abbreviated ℞, and meaning 'take').

Synonyms: address, direction, inscription.

su"per-sede', siū"pĕr-sīd', vt. [-SE'DED; -SE'DING.] 1. To take the place of as by reason of superior worth, appropriateness, efficacy, or right; replace; displace; supplant.

'El-Khalil,' simply, 'the Friend,' is a title which has in Mussulman countries superseded altogether his [Abraham's] own proper name. A. P. STANLEY Jewish Church vol. i, lect. i, p. 11. [S. '84.]

2. To put something in the place of; set aside; suspend; stay; annul; as, to supersede a decree. 3. Bee-keeping. To rear a young queen to take the place of (the old one) at other than swarming-time: said of bees. [< F. superséder, desist, < L. supersedeo; see SUPERSEDERE.]

Synonyms: see SUBVERT.

—su"per-se'dent, n. That which operates so as to supersede; specifically, in medicine, a remedy that operates upon some part or organ so as to displace or prevent disease in such part.—su"per-se'dence, n.—su"per-se'der, n. One who or that which supersedes.—su"per-se'dure, n. The act of superseding, or the state of being superseded. su"per-ses'sion‡.

su"per-se'de-as, siū"pĕr-sī'dē-as or -sē'de-as, n. 1. Law. (1) A writ issued for the purpose of superseding or staying the execution of another writ; a writ or order commanding a stay or the setting aside of proceedings in some matter. (2) A proceeding, as a perfected appeal, writ of error, or writ of certiorari, that operates to suspend the execution of a judgment. 2. [Rare.] Hence, a stoppage; obstruction; check. [L., pres. subj. 2d per. s. of supersedeo; see SUPERSEDERE.]

su"per-se-de're, siū"pĕr-se-dī'rī or -dē're, n. Scots Law. 1. An order of court granting protection to a creditor for cause. 2. An agreement among creditors, under a trust-deed, not to insist on process for collection for a given time. [L., inf. of supersedeo, preside, < super, over, + sedeo, sit.]

su"per-sem'i-nate†, vt. 1. To sow, as seed, over what has been previously sown. 2. Figuratively, to sow broadcast; disseminate widely.—su"per-sem"i-na'tion†, n.—su"per-sem'i-na"tor†, n.

su"per-serv'ice-a-bl(e, siū"pĕr-sĕrv'is-a-bl, a. Attempting needlessly or disagreeably to be of service; overofficious.—su"per-serv'ice-a-bly, adv.

su"per-ses"qui-al'ter-al, siū"pĕr-ses"cwi-al'tĕr-ul, a. Having the ratio of 5 to 2.

su"per-ses"qui-ter'tial, siū"pĕr-ses"cwi-tĕr'shal, a. Having the ratio of 7 to 3.

su"per-ses'sion, siū"pĕr-sesh'un, n. The act of superseding, displacing, or making void; supersedure.

General Nott . . . had the habit of speaking his mind with great directness, a propensity which accounted, perhaps, for the repeated supersessions he had undergone.
ARCH. FORBES Afghan Wars ch. 4, p. 51. [S. '92.]

su"per-sol"id, siū"pĕr-sol'id, n. In hypergeometry, a magnitude of more than three dimensions.

su"per-sti'tion, siū"pĕr-stish'un, n. 1. Belief or a specific form of belief in which ignorant or abnormal religious feeling is shown, as by venerating things that deserve no veneration, or by attaching undue importance to forms and observances in themselves; also, any practise founded on such belief. 2. Specifically, a belief in a religious system regarded (by others than the believer) as unreasonable and without support; a false religion, or any of its rites.

As this [Brahmanical] superstition is of all superstitions the most irrational, and of all superstitions the most inelegant, so it is of all superstitions the most immoral.
MACAULAY Speeches, Mar. 9, '43 p. 274. [L. G. & CO. '54.]

3. Credulity regarding the supernatural, or any specific instance of it; any popular notion attributing occult influence of some kind to trivial things, as belief in omens, charms, and signs; as, the superstitions about spilling salt.

Washington Irving . . . in his beautiful story of the storm ship, which makes its way up the Hudson against wind and tide, . . . has finely embodied one of the most interesting superstitions [respecting fantom ships] of the early American colonists.
BREWSTER Natural Magic letter vi, p. 223. [TEGG '68.]

4. Loosely, any unreasonable belief held by a body of men; as, a political superstition. 5†. Scrupulousness beyond need; overexactness; punctiliousness. 6†. Idolatrous devotion. [F., < L. superstitio(n-), < super, over, + sto, stand.]

Synonyms: see FANATICISM.

—su"per-sti'tion-ist†, n. One who is superstitious.

su"per-sti'tious, siū"pĕr-stish'us, a. 1. Disposed to believe in or be influenced by superstitions; especially, enthralled by superstition as regards religious forms and observances. 2. Involving or resulting from superstition; as, superstitious observances. 3†. Overexact, as from superstition. 4†. Foolishly devoted. [The phrase too superstitious as used in the Authorized Version of the New Testament in Paul's speech on Mars Hill (Acts xvii, 22) is a mistranslation, and is better rendered "very religious" or "excessively religious."] [< L. superstitiosus, < super, over, + sto, stand.]

—superstitious uses (Eng. Law), a use or trust that has for its object the propagation (in England) of the doctrines and ceremonials of a religion not tolerated by law, as endowments of monasteries and religious houses.

—su"per-sti'tious-ly, adv.—su"per-sti'tious-ness, n.

su"per-struct'†, vt. To build or erect upon or as upon a foundation.

—su"per-struc'tion†, n. 1. The act of building as on a foundation. 2. A superstructure.—su"per-struct'ive†, a. Superstructed.—su"per-struct'or†, n.

su"per-struc'ture, siū"pĕr-struc'chur or -tiūr, n. A building or structure of any kind having a foundation; any part of a structure considered in relation to the part on which it rests; specifically, the sleepers, rails, etc., of a railway, as distinguished from the road-bed: used also figuratively. [< L. superstructus, pp. of superstruo, build over, < super, over, + struo, build.]

Let the superstructure of life be enjoyment, but let its foundation be in solid work. DINAH M. CRAIK Woman's Thoughts about Women ch. 1, p. 22. [J. BR. '66.]

—su"per-struc'tur-al, a.

su"per-tasse', siū"pĕr-tas', n. A wire frame or prop, covered with gold thread, silver, or silk, formerly used by women to hold a ruff in position. [Appar. < SUPPORT, v.] sup"por-tasse'‡.

su'per-ton"ic, siū'pĕr-ton'ic, n. Mus. The tone above the tonic; the second.

su"per-tri-par'ti-ent, siū"pĕr-trai-pār'ti-ent, a. Having the ratio of 7 to 4. [< SUPER- + TRI- + L. partient(t-)s, dividing.] su"per-tri-quar'tal‡.

su"per-vac"u-a'tion, siū"pĕr-vac'yu-ê'shun, n. Pathol. Excessive evacuation of the bowels.

su"per-vene', siū"pĕr-vīn', vi. [-VENED'; -VE'NING.] To come as something extraneous or additional; follow closely upon something; also, to take place; happen; as, when the doctor gives up the priest supervenes. [< L. supervenio, < super, over, + venio, come.]

Synonyms: see BEFALL; HAPPEN.

—su"per-ve'ni-ent, a. Coming upon as something extraneous; supervening; additional.—su"per-ven'tion, n. The act or state of supervening.

su"per-vise', siū"pĕr-vaiz', vt. [-VISED'; -VI'SING.] 1. To have a general oversight of, especially as an officer vested with authority; superintend; inspect. 2†. To read over. [< LL. supervisus; see SUPERVISION.]

su"per-vise'†, n. Oversight; inspection.

—on the supervise†, on first inspection.

su"per-vi'sion, siū"pĕr-vizh'un, n. The act of supervising; superintendence; oversight. [< LL. supervisus, pp. of supervideo, oversee, < L. super, over, + video, see.] su"per-vi'sal‡.

Synonyms: see OVERSIGHT.

su"per-vi'sor, siū"pĕr-vai'zor. n. 1. One who supervises or oversees; a superintendent; an inspector. 2. [Local, U. S.] (t) A township officer in administrative charge of its business; one of a board of such officers constituting a body having charge of the business of a county. (2) A borough officer who has charge of road-repairs, etc. 3†. A reviser, as for publication. 4†. A beholder. [LL., < supervisus; see SUPERVISION.]

Synonyms: see SUPERINTENDENT.

su"per-vi'so-ry, siū"pĕr-vai'zo-ri, a. Pertaining to or having supervision. su"per-vi'siv(e‡ [Rare].

su'pi-nate, siū'pi-nêt, vt. [-NA'TED; -NA'TING.] To place or render supine; especially, to turn, as the hand or fore limb, so that the palm is upward or forward. [< L. supinatus; see SUPINATOR.]

su"pi-na'tion, siū"pi-nē'shun, n. 1. Physiol. The act or movement of turning the palm of the hand, or the corresponding surface of the fore limb, upward; also, the position of a limb so turned: opposed to pronation.

When the arm and hand hang down, the palm being directed forwards, the position is that of supination, and the bones of the forearm are situate side by side. ST. GEORGE MIVART The Common Frog ch. 7, p. 104. [MACM. '74.]

2. The act or state of lying with the face upward. 3. Fencing. The position of the wrist when the hand is turned upward.

su'pi-na"tor, siū'pi-nē"tĕr, (1. E. (siū'pi-nē'tĕr. W. Wr.; siū-pain'ēt-ĕr. J.), n. A muscle of the forearm by which supination is effected. See illus. under MUSCULAR SYSTEM. [< L. supinatus, pp. of supino, put on the back, < sub, under.]

su-pine', siu-pain', a. 1. Lying on the back: opposed to prone. 2. Having no interest or care; inactive; negligent; indolent; indifferent.

If we contemplate a savage nation in any part of the globe, a supine indolence and a carelessness of futurity will be found to constitute their general character.
GIBBON Rome vol. i, ch. 9, p. 260. [P. S. & CO. '52.]

sup-pone'†, rt. To place beneath.

sup-port', sup-pōrt', rt. 1. To bear the weight of, especially by holding up from underneath; keep from falling; buoy up; uphold; as, a gallery supported by pillars. 2. Hence, figuratively, to keep from failing or declining; sustain by material or spiritual aid; maintain in vigor; as, to support life; to support courage.

A mind strengthened by truth and a determined purpose will support a feeble body, and enable it to do wonders.
J. F. CLARKE Self-culture lect. n, p. 67. [O. & CO. '80.]

3. To supply means for the maintenance of; furnish with what is needed; provide for; as, to support a church or a family. 4. To carry on; keep up; as, to support a conversation; to support a war. 5. To bear or endure without being overcome, dissipated, or destroyed; also, to put up with; as, he supports fatigue well; I can not support his insolence.

Can a soul like mine,
Unus'd to power, and form'd for humbler scenes,
Support the splendid miseries of greatness!
S. JOHNSON Irene act ii, sc. 2.

6. To show to be true or trustworthy; substantiate; vindicate; defend; as, to support a statement or charges; also, to advocate, second, or back, as a legislative measure. 7. To give assistance to; favor; adhere to; defend; as, to support a policy or ministry; sometimes, to speak in favor of; as, to support a resolution of inquiry. 8. To act as an aid, escort, or attendant to, as on a public occasion; accompany, as if to hold up; as, the chairman was supported by several senators. 9. Theat. To play a part subordinate to; also, to represent or act, as a rôle or part; as, to support a principal actor; to support the part of Iago. 10. Mus. To be subordinate to; accompany. 11. Mil. To act as a support to; be in position to aid in attack or defense. 12. [Rare.] Her. To be grouped with as a supporter. [< F. supporter, < L. supporto, < sub, beneath, + porto, carry.]

Synonyms: bear, carry, hold up, keep up, maintain, prop, sustain, uphold. Support and sustain alike signify to hold up or keep up, to prevent from falling or sinking; but sustain has a special sense of continuous exertion or strength, as when we speak of sustained endeavor or a sustained note; a flower is supported by the stem or a temple-roof by arches; the foundations of a great building sustain an enormous pressure; to sustain life implies a greater exigency and need than to support life; to say one is sustained under affliction is to say more both of the severity of the trial and the completeness of the upholding than if we say he is supported. To bear is the most general word, denoting all holding up or keeping up of any object, whether in rest or motion; in the derived senses it refers to something that is a tax upon strength or endurance; as, to bear a strain; to bear pain or grief. To maintain is to keep in a state or condition, especially in an excellent and desirable condition; as, to maintain health or reputation; to maintain one's position; to maintain a cause or proposition is to hold it against opposition or difficulty. To support may be partial, to maintain is complete; maintain is a word of more dignity than support; a man supports his family; a state maintains an army or navy. To prop is always partial, signifying to add support to something that is insecure. See ABET; AID; BEAR; ENDURE; KEEP; LEAN; LIVE; PROP.—Antonyms: abandon, betray, break down, cast down, demolish, desert, destroy, drop, let go, overthrow, throw down, wreck.—Prepositions: the roof is supported by, on, or upon pillars; the family was supported on or upon a pittance, or by charity.

Expecting immediate support from Normandy, the conspirators hastened to put themselves in a military posture.
W. RUSSELL Modern Europe vol. i, letter xxiii, p. 144. [H. '30.]

A just cause is its own support. A. P. STANLEY Sermons and Addresses in Am. ser. iv, p. 157. [MACM. '79.]

3. One who or that which furnishes a livelihood to a person or family; a source or means of living; also, subsistence; sustenance; living. 4. A maintaining in continuance; sustenance in existence or vigor; especially, preservation from failing, languishing, or perishing; also, the requisites of such support; as, the support of credit, life, or a church; support of combustion. 5. Theat. A person or company supporting a leading actor or star. 6. Mil. The second line of troops in a formation for attack or defense; the line in rear of the firing-line, forming with it the fighting-line. See RESERVE, 5. 7. Mus. A subordinate or accompanying part. 8. Phot. Any material bearing a film on its surface. sup-port'al†; sup"por-ta'tion†.

Synonyms: see ADJUNCT; CONSOLATION; HELP.

—right of support. 1. Right, as of a wife or child, to a reasonable maintenance. 2. Right of a landowner to the support of his ground or buildings naturally afforded by the land adjoining.

sup-port'ance, sup-pōrt'ans, n. 1. Scots Law. Any assistance given to enable a person otherwise incapable to go to church or to market, with a view to validate a deed made by such infirm person within sixty days of his death. 2†. Maintenance; support.

sup-port'ed, sup-pōrt'ed, pa. 1. Having or having had support. 2. Her. Having a similar charge underneath.

sup-port'er, sup-pōrt'er, n. 1. One who or that which supports, in any sense. Specifically: (1) In surgery: (a) A support for some portion or part of the body; as, an abdominal supporter. (b) A pessary. (2) Mech. A knee, cleat, bracket, or similar support. (3) One who countenances or supports; an adherent; as, the supporters of a political faction. (4) In society organizations, an officer who sits beside a presiding officer; as, the right-hand supporter. sup-port'less, sup-pōrt'les, a. Being without support.

sup-pose', sup-pōz', v. [SUP-POSED'; SUP-PO'SING.] I. t. 1. To think or imagine to be true; imagine; believe; generally with an implication of false or mistaken belief; as, the ancients supposed the world to be flat.

The twenty-four hours of each day were devoted to those planets in the order of their supposed distance from the earth,—Saturn, Jupiter, Mars, the Sun, Venus, Mercury, and the Moon.
R. A. PROCTER Great Pyramid, Astron. and Jewish Festivals p. 274 [C. & W. '83.]

2. To lay down or admit without proof; assume as true for the sake of argument or illustration; as, suppose he is innocent. 3. To require to exist as true; imply as cause or consequence; involve as an inference; as, design in creation supposes the existence of a God.

Virtue . . . is the fruit of exertion. It supposes conquest of temptation. CHANNING Works, Evil of Sin p. 351. [A. U. A. '83.]

4†. To substitute by fraud.

II. i. To frame a supposition; imagine; colloquially, to think as a matter of opinion; as, it is true, I suppose.

So far, there's my acquittal, I suppose.
BROWNING Ring and Book pt. v, l. 1772.

Synonyms: conjecture, deem, guess, imagine, surmise, think. To suppose is temporarily to assume a thing as true, either with the expectation of finding it so or for the purpose of ascertaining what would follow if it were so. To conjecture is to put together the nearest available materials for a provisional opinion, always with some expectation of finding the facts to be as conjectured. To imagine is to form a mental image of something as existing, though its actual existence may be unknown, or even impossible. To think, in this application, is to hold as the result of thought what is admitted not to be matter of exact or certain knowledge; as, I do not know, but I think this to be the fact; a more conclusive statement than would be made by the use of conjecture or suppose. See GUESS. Compare synonyms for HYPOTHESIS; SUSPECT.—Antonyms: ascertain, conclude, discover, know, prove.

surd'i-ty, sûrd'i-ti, n. 1. The state or quality of being surd; lack of sonant quality. 2. Pathol. Deafness. [< L. surdita(t-)s, < surdus, deaf.]

sure, shûr, a. 1. Not liable to change or failure; certain to be, to continue to exist, or to take place; stable; infallible; as, a sure dependence; a sure shot; death is sure to come. 2. Fit, proper, or deserving to be depended upon; that may be confidently depended upon or expected; reliable; trustworthy.

The testimony of the Lord is sure. Ps. xix, 7.

3. Absolutely or approximately certain, as of a fact or truth, or of one's position or ground; free from doubt; certain; positive; of future events, free from fear of being disappointed; not distrustful or apprehensive; as, I am sure he tells the truth; one is sure of what one sees; be sure you are right; sure of heaven.

I am sure that I think, although I may not be sure of that about which I think. E. H. CHAPIN Lessons of Faith and Life ser. xii, p. 207. [JAS. M. '77.]

4. Certain of obtaining, attaining, or retaining something: with of; as, to be sure of success; sure of a living. 5. [Archaic.] Free from peril or danger; safe; secure; as, sure in one's castle. 6†. Real; true; genuine. 7†. Pledged to marry; betrothed. [< F. sûr, < L. securus; see SECURE, a.]

Synonyms: actual, assured, aware, certain, clear, confident, indisputable, infallible, positive, real. See AUTHENTIC, AWARE; FAITHFUL; SECURE.

Phrases, etc.: — as sure as a gun [Slang], perfectly certain to happen. — be s. [Colloq.] 1. See TO BE SURE, 2. Be certain; as, be sure to obey me. — sure'e-nough'. I. a. [Local, U. S.] Real; genuine. II. adv. Surely. — s.-footed, a. Not liable to fall or stumble; figuratively, not liable to err. — s.-footedly, adv. — s.-footedness, n. — to be s. [Colloq.], Indeed; certainly. — to have a s. thing [Slang], to have a certainty; be sure, beyond a doubt, of obtaining or succeeding in a thing. — to make s. 1. To make certain; secure so that there can be no failure; as, make your salvation sure; make sure of your safety. 2†. To betroth.

sure, adv. [Colloq. or Obs.] 1. Surely; certainly.

But sure a general doom on man is past,
And all are fools and lovers, first or last.
DRYDEN Palamon and Arcite bk. ii, l. 379.

2†. Securely. sur'ed-ly†.

— sure'set", a. Securely or firmly established.

sure'ful-ly†, adv. Carefully; safely.

sure'ly, shûr'li, adv. [SURE'LI-ER; SURE'LI-EST.] 1. In a sure manner; without doubt; certainly; sometimes so used as to raise a question regarding a possibility of the opposite and so to suggest doubt; as, surely you are not going to do that! Compare DOUBTLESS.

As surely as Christ has risen, so surely shall believers be saved. C. HODGE On Romans ch. 4, p. 103. [W. M. '58.]

2. Without peril or danger; securely; safely.

One gets surelier onward by walking than leaping.
LOWELL Fable for Critics st. 41.

sure'ment†, n. Security for payment; surety.

sures'by†, n. One who may be depended on. sure'by†.

su-rette', siu-ret', n. A West-Indian and Brazilian tree (Byrsonima spicata) of the malpighiad family, whose bark (Muruxi bark) is used for tanning and dyeing. Its edible but astringent berries are used in dysentery. [< F. surette, dim. of sur, SOUR.]

sure'ty†, vt. To pledge or offer as surety for.

sure'ty, shûr'ti, n. [SURE'TIES, pl.] 1. A person who engages to be responsible for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another; guarantor; bail.

The words surety and guarantor are often used promiscuously, but in English and American law a surety technically is one who immediately becomes liable on any default of his principal, while a guarantor becomes liable only when the principal is unable to perform. Bail is one who becomes surety for another in a civil or criminal proceeding.

2. A pledge of money deposited or of credit given to secure against loss or damage; security for payment or performance.

If any burgher interrupted a tribune when speaking to the commons, in their own assembly, the tribune might impeach him before the commons, and might require him to give sureties to such an amount as the accuser should think proper.
THOMAS ARNOLD Rome vol. i, ch. 13, p. 231. [R. '45.]

3. That which gives security or confidence; ground or basis of certainty or security. 4. The state of being sure; sureness; certainty; as, the inward surety of salvation. 5. [Archaic.] A sponsor. 6†. Security; safety. 7†. Confirmation; proof; warrant. [< F. sûreté, < L. securitas; see SECURITY.]

Synonyms: see CERTAINTY.

— of a surety [Archaic], surely; certainly. — s. for good behavior, a recognizance, with sureties, entered into before a magistrate by a person "not of good fame," for good behavior. — s. of the peace, an obligation binding a person to keep the peace.

sure'ty-ship, shûr'ti-ship, n. Law. 1. The liability, contract, or undertaking of one who becomes a surety. 2. The relation in which a person stands toward one for whom he has become bound as surety. sure'ti-ship†.

sur-ex"ci-ta'tion, sur-ec'si-tē'shun, n. [Rare.] Excessive excitation.

Insanity came later, the product of intellectual sur-excitation and public persecution.
JOHN MORLEY Rousseau ch. 7, p. 279. [C. & H. '73.]

surf[1], sûrf, n. The swell of the sea, that breaks upon a shore; the disturbed and surging condition of water where it meets the land. See illus. in preceding column. [Var. of SOUGH[1]: from the sound of the billows.]

Compounds: — surf'bird", n. An aphrizoid plover-like bird (Aphriza virgata) of the Pacific coast of America from Alaska to Chile, having the bill shorter than the tarsus, and the tail emarginate. — s.-bont, n. A boat of extra strength and buoyancy, for passing through surf. — s.-boatman, n. One who manages or aids in handling a surf-boat. — s.-clam, n. A large mactroid bivalve found on sandy coasts, especially Mactra or Spisula solidissima, common on the Atlantic coast of the United States. — s.-duck, n. One of various scoters or sea-ducks (genus Œdemia), especially the surf-scoter (Œ. perspicillata). — s.-fish, n. A Californian holconotoid fish of perch-like form. The females bring forth young viviparously. See illus. under ALFIONE. — s.-fishing, n. Fly-fishing by casting from the beach into the surf. — s.-scoter, n. A surf-duck, especially the North-American (Œdemia perspicillata. The adult male is black with a white spot on the forehead and the nape. — s.-smelt, n. An argentinoid fish about a foot long (Hypomesus olidus), found on the Pacific coast of the United States. — s.-whiting, n. A sciænoid fish, the silver whiting (Menticirrus littoralis). — s.-worn, a. Worn by the action of the surf; as, a surf-worn shore.

surf[2], n. [Prov. Eng.] The bottom or channel of a drain.

sur'face, sûr'fēs, vt. [SUR'FACED; SUR'FA-CING.] To put a surface on; give a (particular kind of) surface to; especially, to give a smooth or even surface to, as lumber: make smooth, even, or plain.

sur'face, n. 1. The exterior part of anything that has length, breadth, and thickness; the outside of a body; superficies; exterior.

I . . . chose my wife as she did her wedding-gown, not for a fine glossy surface, but for such qualities as would wear well.
GOLDSMITH Vicar of Wakefield ch. 1, p. 1. [H. M. & CO.]

2. Geom. A two-dimensional space-form; that which at every point has continuous extension in two dimensions and no more, having length and breadth, but not thickness. 3. That which is apparent on a slight examination or without examination; external view or appearance; as, his thoughts did not lie on the surface.

We talk and think upon the surface. Few of us examine the major premises of half our conclusions. FROUDE Short Studies, Party Politics in third series, p. 325. [S. '77.]

4. In steam-engineering, a portion exposed to heat; especially, the combined area of the walls of the tubes or flues in a boiler: used instead of heating-surface, tube-surface, etc. 5. That portion of the side of a fortification which is bounded by the angle of the nearest bastion and the prolongation of the flank. [F., < sur- (see SUR-); and see FACE[1], n.]

Compounds, etc.: — algebraic surface, a surface represented by an algebraic equation. — central s., a surface having a center, as that of a sphere or an ellipsoid. — conical s., a surface generated by the motion of a straight line having one point fixed and constantly intersecting a curve. — doubly connected s., a surface in which two paths joining two points can not be made to coincide with each other by continuous variation, though all other paths can be reconciled with one or the other of these, as an anchor-ring: opposed to singly connected s., in which all the lines that can be drawn between two points can be made to coincide by continuous variations of the lines. — equipotential s., a surface every point of which is at the same potential, and which cuts lines of force at right angles. level s.; — faying s., see FAY[1], v. — minimal s., a surface satisfying given conditions and having a minimum area. — polar s., reciprocal s., a surface tangent to all the polar planes of the points of another surface, and vice versa. — Riemann's s., a surface consisting of an indefinite number of plane sheets, which are connected chainwise by cross-lines, so that the first is connected only with the second, the second with the third, and so on, there being no direct connection except between consecutive sheets. It represents an n-valued function. — ruled s., a surface generated by the motion of a right line. — surface car", n. A car, as a horse-car, on a surface-road. — s.-conduction, n. Physics. The rate of the loss of heat from a body, depending upon the condition of its surface, whether polished or blackened. — s.-current, n. A distinct current of superficial depth at the surface of a body of water. — s.-fish, n. A fish that swims near the surface of the water. — s.-fishing, n. Fly-fishing. — s.-gage, n. Mach. A gage for laying off work, usually from a plane surface. — s.-glaze, n. Ceramics. A thin and perfectly transparent glaze over both the body and the decoration. — s.-grinder, n. A grinding-machine having a plate or table adjusted for holding an object true while the surface is ground. — s.-grub, n. A cutworm. — s.-integral, n. The integral, taken over a surface, of any differential that has a continuously varying value over that surface. — s.-mining, n. Mining at or near the surface; placer-mining. — s.-motion, n. Motion at the surface. — s. of revolution, a surface generated by a curve revolving about an axis. — s.-plane, n. A machine for dressing or smoothing lumber; a surfacer. s.-planer, — s.-plate, n. 1. A plate having a very accurate surface: used for testing other surfaces. 2. The table or plate of a surface-grinder. — s.-printing, n. Printing from a relief surface, as distinguished from printing from an incised surface; especially, the printing of cotton cloth from such a surface. — s.-rib, n. Arch. A rib applied to the surface of vaulting, etc., merely as an ornament. — s.-road, n. A railroad on the surface of the ground: distinguished from an elevated or an underground railroad. — s.-roller, n. An engraved color-roller on a calico-printing machine. See illus. under PRINT. — s.-tension, n. The tension of a liquid by virtue of which it acts as an elastic enveloping membrane, tending always to contract to the minimum area: best exemplified in films freed from liquid masses, as in a soap-bubble, and in the formation of drops. It is commonly explained as due to the fact that while molecules in the interior are attracted in all directions, and are thus in equilibrium, those on the surface have no neighbors outside to balance the attraction of those within, and are consequently acted upon by a resultant force tending toward the interior. — s.-towing, n. [Rare.] The work of collecting specimens in natural history from the surface of the sea, as distinguished from dredging. — s.-water, n. Water on or from the surface of the ground; drainage-water, as distinguished from spring- or well-water. — s.-working, n. Same as SURFACE-MINING. — s.-worm, n. A surface-grub.

sur'faced, sûr'fēst, pa. Worked or brought to a particular kind of surface, especially to a smooth or even surface: specifically applied to paper to which a smooth filling coat has been given, as by supersizing.

sur'face-ly, sûr'fĕs-li, adv. Without going below the surface; superficially.

sur'face-man, sûr'fĕs-măn, n. [-MEN, pl.] 1. Mining. (1) A miner employed in an open-air working. (2) A laborer employed on surface-work. 2. [Eng.] A workman employed in keeping a railway-bed in repair.

sur'fa-cer, sûr'fa-sẽr, n. 1. A planing-machine for giving a true surface to lumber, having usually feed-rolls that carry the stuff under or between cutters rotating on horizontal axes; a surfacing-machine or surface-planer. 2. One who smooths and levels a surface, as with a surfacing-machine.

b, bed; c, cutter-head pulley; g, feed-gear; l, ratchet-lever for tightening the feed-belt that passes around (fb); w, w, weights adjusting the top feed-roll (f).

sur'fa-cing, sûr'fa-sing, ppr. & verbal n. of SURFACE, v. —sur'fa-cing-ma-chine", n. Wood-working. 1. A surface-grinder. 2. A surfacer. —s.-plane, n. A carpenters' plane for working flat surfaces; a bench-plane. —s.-planer, n. Same as SURFACER, 1.

sur'felt, sûr'fit, v. I. t. 1. To feed to fulness or to satiety; overfeed; frequently reflexive; as, to surfeit a child with sweetmeats; to surfeit oneself with honey. 2. Figuratively, to supply to satiety or disgust; cloy, as with compliments.

II. i. To partake of food or drink to satiety; hence, to indulge in anything to excess.

—sur'felt-er, n. —sur'felt-ing, n. Surfeit.

sur-felt, n. 1. The act of surfeiting oneself; excess in eating or drinking; indulgence in anything to satiety; also, the excessive quantity partaken of or indulged in; as, a surfeit of sweets; a surfeit of love. 2. The result of surfeiting oneself; satiety.

He enjoys to a surfeit these bounties of nature.
R. A. WILSON Mexico ch. 3, p. 51. [H. '55.]

3. The state of being surfeited; oppressive fulness of the system caused by excess in eating or drinking; as, to be affected by surfeit. 4. [Prov. Eng.] A cold; disorder. [< OF. surfait, < surfaire, transcend, < L. super, over, + facio, do.] —sur'felt-swelled", a. [Rare.] Swelled with excessive eating and drinking. —s.-water, n. Water believed to cure surfeits.

sur'flet†, vt. Same as SURPHUL. sur'flet†.

surf'er, sûrf'ẽr, n. [U. S.] The surf-scoter.

sur-fi'cial, sur-fish'al, a. Originally belonging to, occurring at, or formed, deposited, or exuded on the surface, as on the crustal surface of the earth: contrasted in geology with subterranean. [< SURFACE.]

Had it been a surficial stream it would have had no fracturing power. J. D. DANA in Am. Journal of Science Aug., '92, p. 166.

surf'man, sûrf'măn, n. [SURF'MEN, pl.] A member of the crew of a surf-boat, especially in the life-saving service; a person skilled in handling boats in surf.

surf'man-ship, n. [Rare.] The art of a surfman.

sur'foot"†, a. Weary or footsore.

sur"frap"pé', sûr'frap'pé', n. [F.] Numis. Restruck or restamped, as a coin: usually with an inscription or a design different from the original.

sur-fu'sion, sur-fū'zhun, n. Chem. The condition of being liquid at a temperature below fusing-point, as water cooled below the freezing-point without crystallizing: analogous to supersaturation of a solution. [< SUR- + FUSION.] su"per-fu'sion‡.

surf'y, sûrf'i, a. Abounding with, resembling, or consisting of surf; as, a surfy beach; surfy billows.

surge, sûrj, v. [SURGED; SUR'GING.] I. t. 1. To cause to move onward with a swelling and rushing motion, as billows, sound-waves, etc.

Great organs surged through arches dim
LOWELL A Parable st. 4.

2. Naut. To let go suddenly, as a rope or cable when it binds about a pin or winch.

II. i. 1. To rise high and roll onward, as waves; swell or heave; often figuratively; as, a surging crowd.

From surging gulf two Monsters streight were brought.
SPENSER Faerie Queene bk. i, can. 5, st. 38.

2. Naut. (1) To slip along suddenly, as a rope or cable that passes around a bit, belaying-pin, or windlass. (2)† To rise and fall on the waves, as a ship at anchor; ride. [< F. surgir, < L. surgo; see SURGENT.]

surge, n. 1. A large swelling wave or mass of waves; a great rolling volume of water; billow; sometimes used collectively, and often figuratively; as, surges driven by the wind; a coast beaten by the surge; a surge of flame.

But turn to Homer! How his Verses sweep!
Surge answers Surge and Deep doth call on Deep.
A. LANG Letters to Dead Authors letter v, p. 53. [S. '86.]

2. The act of surging; a heaving and rolling motion, as of great waves. 3. Naut. The tapered front of a capstan or windlass, on which a rope may surge. 4. Physics. A violent oscillation set up by an electric discharge in an open-circuit wire, analogous to that of water in a long trough when it is tilted. 5. A variation of barometric level due to other causes than the regular daily variation or the passage of a low-pressure area. 6†. A spring; fountain.

—surge'ful, a. Full of or abounding in surges; as, a surgeful coast. —surge'less, a. Free from surges.

sur'gent, sûr'jent. I. a. [Rare.] Rising, as a flood; swelling; surging. II. n. [S-] Geol. A series of rocks corresponding to the Clinton formation of the New York system, and forming the fifth of the Pennsylvania system as indicated by Rogers. [< L. surgen(t-)s, ppr. of surgo, contr. of surrigo, raise, < sub, under, + rego, stretch.]

sur'geon, sûr'jun, n. 1. One who practises surgery; a practitioner who treats injuries, deformities, or disorders by mechanical operations; in Great Britain, specifically, a practitioner who holds the diploma of the Royal College of Surgeons, but has not the degree of M. D. 2. A medical officer in the military or naval service. 3. A surgeon-fish. [< F. chirurgien, < LL. chirurgicus, < L. chirurgus, < Gr. cheirourgos, < cheir, hand, + ergon, work.] sur'gian†; sur'gien†; sur'gion†.

Compounds, etc.: —assistant surgeon, a junior surgeon in the United States naval or military service. —contract s. [U. S.], a civilian medical officer attached to the army as surgeon under a contract. —past assistant s. [U. S.], a medical officer of the army or navy who has passed examination for promotion from the junior grade, and is awaiting appointment as surgeon. —post s., a medical officer of the military service, in charge of the medical department of a military post, garrison, or fixed camp. —sur'geon-a-poth"e-ca-ry, n. [Gt. (1) Philos. A form of mysticism based on revelations claimed to have been received by Swedenborg, teaching especially an intercourse with the spiritual world, and the law of correspondences by which every material thing has a spiritual thing corresponding to it and closely connected with it, or upon the Scriptures allegorically interpreted. According to it there are in things three degrees of being, corresponding to three degrees of being in God—namely, love, or the celestial degree; wisdom, or the spiritual; and use, or the natural—answering to end, cause, and effect. (2) Theol. The doctrines of the New Jerusalem Church. The leading points in Swedenborgian theology are the following: (a) The Lord Jesus Christ is the one God of heaven and earth, in whom is the Divine Trinity, called in the Scripture Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, which is imaged in man by his soul, his body, and his proceeding life. He took our nature upon him, and by victories over the infernal hosts which by temptations assaulted its infirmities, he glorified it and subjugated hell, thus redeeming man. (b) By looking to him and by shunning evils as sins against him, man accepts this redemption and is saved. (c) The Sacred Scripture contains within its letter infinite Divine truth, and is thus the Word of God, in heaven and on earth, teaching the way of life, consociating men with angels, and conjoining all with the Lord. (d) Man is an immortal spirit, having a body of flesh which is laid aside at death, after which he wakes to consciousness in the spiritual world, and, according to the life he has acquired on earth, dwells in heaven as an angel or seeks an abode with his like in hell. (e) The second coming of the Lord has already taken place. It is not a coming in person, but is a revelation of him in the internal sense of his Word, and is the beginning of a new Christian church of divine promise, and a new era of enlightenment and progress among men.

The first organization of Swedenborg's followers for public worship was in London in 1783. It is called by its members the New Church, or the New Jerusalem Church.

The gay Oriental liveries of the syces and footmen, gave the display an air of pomp. BAYARD TAYLOR India, China, and Japan ch. 21, p. 267. (G. P. P. '55.)

sy-cee', sai-sī', C. E. I. S. W.[2] (si sī', W.[1] Wr.). 1. a. Pure; unalloyed: said by the Chinese of lumps of uncoined silver. II. n. Same as SYCEE-SILVER. [< Chin. si szĕ, fine silk.]

—sy-cee'-sil"ver, n. Pure uncoined lump silver of various sizes, usually having a banker's or assayer's seal stamped on them, used by Chinese as a medium of exchange and reckoned by weight. The larger, sometimes called shoes, are boat-shaped, and weigh about one pound troy.

sy-chee', sai-chī', n. [Chin.] Black tea.

sych"no-car'pous, sic'no-cär'pus, a. Bot. Producing fruit many times before perishing; perennial. [< Gr. sychnos, many, + karpos, fruit.]

sych-nod'y-mite, sic-ned'i-mait, n. Mineral. A metallic steel-gray copper, cobalt, nickel, and iron sulfid, (Cu,Co,Ni,Fe)$_4$S$_5$, crystallizing in the isometric system. [< Gr. sychnos, many, + dynamis, power.]

sy'cite, sai'sait, n. A fig-shaped pebble or mass of flint. [< Gr. sykitēs, like a fig, < sykon, fig.]

syc"o-ce'ric, sic'o-sī'ric, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or referring to a waxy resin obtained from certain Australian figs (Ficus rubiginosa). [< Gr. sykon, fig, + kēros, wax.] syc"o-ce-ryl'ic‡. — sycoceric acid, a crystalline compound ($C_{17}H_{35}O_2$) prepared by synthesis.

syc"o-ce'ryl, sic'o-sī'ril, W. (si-cēs'gr-ail, E.), n. Chem. A hypothetical radical of the sycoceric compounds, most of which are derived directly from a waxy resin contained in the Australian fig-plant. [< Gr. sykon, fig, + kēros, wax, + -YL.]

sy'cock, sai'cec, n. [Prov. Eng.] The missel-thrush.

sy-co'ma, sai-cō'mə, n. Pathol. A fig-shaped wart or excrescence. [< Gr. sykōma, < sykon, fig.]

syc'o-more, sic'o-mōr, n. [Archaic.] Same as SYCAMORE.

sy'con, sai'con, C., or si'con (sic'on, E.), n. Spong. 1. A form of sponge having the flagellated chambers developed as radial tubes or cylindrical pouches. 2. [S-] A genus typical of Syconidæ. [< Gr. sykon, fig.]

—Sy"co-na'ri-a, n. pl. Spong. A tribe or suborder of heteractinellan sponges with flagellated chambers developed as radial tubes or cylindrical sacs, as Syconidæ, etc.— sy"co-na'ri-an, a. — sy'co-nate, a. Spong. Of, pertaining to, or like a sycon, as heteractinellidan sponges.— Sy-co'nes, n. pl. Spong. A section of calcareous sponges represented by the Syconidæ or Grantiidæ. Sy-co'ni-a‡. — Sy-con'i-dæ, n. pl. Spong. The Grantiidæ. — sy-con'id, a. & n. — syc'o-noid, a.

sy-co'ni-um, sai-[or si-]cō'ni um, n. [-NI-A, pl.] Bot. An aggregate or multiple fruit in which many flowers have been developed on a fleshy receptacle, which is a flattened disk or forms a nearly closed cavity, as in the fig. [< Gr. sykon, fig.] hyp"an-tho'di-um‡; sy-co'nus‡ [-NI, pl.].

The Syconium of a Fig (Ficus Carica).

syc'o-phan-cy, sic'o fən-si, n. The quality, character, or practises of a sycophant; hence, mean tale-bearing; base flattery; fawning.

There was also in almost all democracies special encouragement, in the absence of crown lawyers, for any citizen to denounce any violations of the laws which he could detect. This gave rise to a profession called sycophancy, which usually degenerated into that of a spy or informer.
MAHAFFY Old Greek Life ch. 4, p. 69. [A.]

syc'o-phant, sic'o-fant, v. I. t. 1. To act the part of a sycophant toward. 2†. To give malicious information against; traduce. II. i. [Rare.] To play the sycophant.

syc'o-phant, n. 1. A servile flatterer, especially of those in authority or influence; a cringing or obsequious person; parasite. 2†. An informer or accuser; false witness; slanderer; the original meaning.

The sycophants of Athens were conspicuous and despised characters, being barrators, informers, pettifoggers, slanderers, and rogues for gain.

I here use the word sycophant in its original sense, as a wretch who flatters the prevailing party by informing against his neighbors, under pretense that they are exporters of prohibited figs or fancies. COLERIDGE Works, Bung. Lit. in vol. iii, ch. 10, p. 286. [H.]

—syc"o-phan'tic, a. Of or pertaining to a sycophant; cringing; servile. syc"o-phan'tic-al‡; syc'o-phant"ish; — syc'o-phant"ish-ly, adv. syc'o-phant-ize, vi. To act the sycophant. syc'o-phant-ry, n. The arts or practises of sycophancy.

sy-co'sis, sai-[or si-]cō'sis, n. Pathol. 1. A fungous ulcer. 2. An inflamed condition of the skin involving the hair-follicles, generally of the face and scalp: either simple inflammation or due to a parasite. Called popularly barbers' itch, from the propagation of the parasitic form by infected razors or brushes. [< Gr. sykōsis, < sykon, fig.] sy-ko'sis‡.

syde, said, a. [Scot.] Long; hanging low, as garments. Compare SIDE2.

sy-de'ro-lite, sai dī'ro-lait (sid'gr-o-lait, I. Wr.; sai-dīr'ə lait, E.), n. A variety of Bohemian earthenware. [< Gr. sidēros, iron, + lithos, stone.]

sy'en-ite, sai'en-ait, n. Petrol. A massive plutonic rock resembling granite, except that it contains little or no quartz. Since it is in general more basic than granite, it contains no muscovite, and is proportionately richer in plagioclase, hornblende, and pyroxene. If very rich in alkali, elæolite or leucite may partially replace the feldspar. The name, given by Werner, was formerly used for hornblendic granites. Varieties are syenite proper, nuigites, elæolite-s, and leucite-s.

sy"en-it'ic, sai'en-it'ic, a. 1. Of or pertaining to syenite. 2. [S-] Of or pertaining to Syene, in Upper Egypt.

syk'er†, adv. Truly; surely.

sylf, n. Sylph. PHIL. Soc.

syl'la-ba an'ceps, sil'ə-ba an'seps or -ceps. [L.] Anc. Pros. Literally, a doubtful syllable; a final syllable unrestricted as to quantity, the pause at the end of every verse obscuring the difference between long and short.

syl'la-ba-ry, sil'ə-bə-ri, n. [-RIES, pl.] A list or catalogue of characters representing syllables; syllabic characters, collectively, of a language, answering the function of an alphabet in writing.

Along with other elements of civilization, the Semites received the cuneiform system of writing from their predecessors, and in the process of transmission the transformation of the old picture-writing into a syllabary was completed.
A. H. SAYCE in Encyc. Brit. 9th ed., vol. xiii, p. 115.

syl'la-bi, sil'ə-bai or -bi, n. Plural of SYLLABUS.

syl-lab'ic, si-lab'ic, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or consisting of a syllable or syllables; as, syllabic quantity.

The rhythm or measure of the verse in this poem must be considered as accentual rather than syllabical — that is to say, it depends rather upon the number of the accents than of the syllables. CRAIK Eng. Lit. and Lang., Piers Ploughman vol. i, p. 243. [S.]

2. Representing the phonetic value of a syllable or syllables instead of a single letter: opposed to alphabetic and ideographic; as, syllabic writing. 3. Having every syllable distinctly pronounced; as, a syllabic style of speaking. [< Gr. syllabikos, < syllabē; see SYLLABARY.]

syl-lab'ic-al‡. — syllabic augment (Gr. Gram.), augment effected by prefixing a syllable: distinguished from temporal augment.

syl-lab'i-cate, si-lab'i-kēt, vt. [-CA'TED; -CA'TING.] To separate into syllables; indicate the separation of into syllables to aid pronunciation; as, all vocabulary words in this dictionary are syllabicated. syl-lab'i-fy‡.

—syl-lab"i-ca'tion, n. The act, process, or method of syllabicating; division of words into syllables; formation of syllables. syl-lab"i-fi-ca'tion‡.

[For an explanation of the system employed in this dictionary, see the Appendix.]

syl'la-bism, sil'ə-bizm, n. 1. The quality or character of being syllabic. 2. The use of characters representing syllables instead of letters in a written language.

Syllabism, the next stage in the progress of writing, finds its best illustration in the development of the Japanese writing out of the Chinese.
ISAAC TAYLOR The Alphabet vol. i, ch. 1, p. 33. [K. P. & CO. '83.]

syl'la-bize, sil'ə-baiz, vt. [-BIZED; -BI'ZING.] To divide (words) or form (letters) into syllables. [< L. syllaba; see SYLLABARY.]

syl'la-ble, sil'ə-bl, v. [-BLED; -BLING.] I. t. 1. [Poet. or Obs.] To express by pronouncing the syllables one after another; hence, to utter; speak.

I cannot shape my tongue
To syllable black deeds into smooth names.
BYRON Marino Faliero act iii, sc. 1.

2†. To syllabicate. II. i. To speak.

syl'la-ble, n. 1. A single or articulated vocal sound; that which is uttered in a single vocal impulse; also, the characters or letters that represent such a sound; a word or part of a word that is capable of separate and complete enunciation by one voice-impulse.

A syllable may be a single vowel or diphthongal sound, or one of these preceded or followed by one or more consonants, or both. A sound ending with a vowel is called an open syllable; one ending with a consonant is called a closed syllable. See CONSONANT; VOWEL. For the length of syllables in prosody, see QUANTITY.

2. A very small portion of a sentence or of discourse; the smallest particle of expression; a tittle.

SMOLLETT Humphry Clinker, Letter to Dr. Lewis p. 52. [H. '73.]

[< OF. syllable, sillabe, < L. syllaba, < Gr. syllabē; see SYLLABARY.] sil'la-ble†.

—syllable name (Mus.), the syllable name given to a note in the diatonic scale, as sol, mi, etc.; distinguished from the letter name, as G, D, etc. See SOLMIZATION.— syl'la-ble-stum"bling, n. Spasmodic hesitation in the utterance of certain syllables; stuttering.

syl'la-bub, n. Same as SILLIBUB.

syl'la-bus, sil'ə-bus, n. [-BI, pl.] 1. A concise statement of the main points of a subject; outline of a subject, course, lecture, or treatise; summary or schedule of contents; epitome; abstract.

Natural religion has been described by one party as a mere negation, or a mere syllabus of wants. By another party it has been represented as furnishing the basis to revealed religion. MCCOSH Divine Government bk. iv, ch. 2, p. 517. [C. & BROS. '58.]

2. R. C. Ch. A tabulation or brief and formal presentation of matters settled by the Roman Curia; specifically, the enumeration of modern errors to be reprobated, distributed under ten heads, and attached to the encyclical letter of Pius IX., dated Dec. 8, 1864. These errors pertain to pantheism, rationalistic religions, indifferentism, forms of socialism, the rights of the church, social relations, ethics, marriage, papal jurisdiction, and modern liberalism. [L.L., < Gr. syllambanō, collect, < syn, together, + lambanō, take.]

syl-lep'sis, sil-lep'sis, n. [-SES, -sēz or -sēs, pl.] Gram. & Rhet. 1. The adaptation of an expression to the sense intended rather than to the syntax or form; the inclusion of both literal and metaphorical senses in one predication of a word, as in the lines,

That Hand which bears all nature up Shall guide His children well.

2. The figure that refers an adjective or verb to a substantive with which it has logical agreement, while having syntactical agreement with another substantive differing, as in person, number, or gender; a figure arising from ellipsis; as, he or they were present; Socils et rege recepto.

Fill up all the ellipses and syllepses of Tacitus, Sallust, Livy, etc., and the elegance and force of their sententious brevity are extinguished. JEFFERSON in H. S. Randall's Thomas Jefferson vol. iii, ch. 9, p. 391. [D. & J. '58.]

3. Physiol. Conception. [L., < Gr. syllēpsis, putting together, < syn, together, + lambanō, take.]

syl-lep'tic, sil-lep'tic, a. 1. Pertaining to, of the nature of, or containing syllepsis. 2. Harmonizing Scripture with modern science. syl-lep'tic-al‡.

Syl'li-dæ, sil'i-dē or -dē, n. pl. Helminth. A family of rapacious annelids without gills and with elongate tentacular filaments and a long proboscis without jaws. [< SYLLIS.] — syl'lid, syl-lid'i-an, n. — syl'loid, a.

Syl'lis, sil'is, n. Helminth. 1. A genus typical of Syllidæ. 2. [s-] A sea-worm of this or a related genus. In many of the species fission takes place, the asexual parent form dividing into two or more parts of which the posterior only develops sexual organs. Many of the species are phosphorescent. [< Gr. psellion, necklace.]

syl'lo-ge, sil'o-gi, n. [Rare.] A collection. [< Gr. syllogē, < syllogizesthai; see SYLLOGIZE.]

syl"lo-gi-sa'tion, syl'lo-gise, etc. Same as SYLLOGIZATION, etc.

syl'lo-gism, sil'o-jizm, n. 1. The regular logical form of reasoning or argument, consisting of three propositions, the first two of which are called the premises and the third the conclusion.

To a legitimate syllogism it is essential that there should be three, and no more than three, propositions, namely, the conclusion, or proposition to be proved, and two other propositions which together prove it, and which are called the premises.
MILL Logic bk. ii, ch. 2, p. 126. [H. '90.]

The first two propositions, called the major premise and minor premise, having one term, called the middle term, in common, form the basis for a conclusion in which the common term disappears after furnishing the logical connection between the other two; as,

No finite being is exempt from error;
All men are finite beings;
Therefore, no man is exempt from error.

If the premises be true and the process of reasoning valid, the conclusion is demonstrative. The premises may not be true and yet the conclusion from them be formally valid though materially false. Three things are essential in valid syllogistic reasoning: true premises, valid form and process of reasoning, and a real connecting principle embodied in the middle term. The real connecting principle is the relation of reason and consequent. Syllogism is also loosely applied to that form of inductive reasoning in which an enumeration of particulars furnishes the basis for a general inference or conclusion. Compare FALLACY; FIGURE; MOOD; PREMISE; TERM.

Syllogisms may be either categorical or hypothetical. (See these words.) They may also be (1) simple (monosyllogism), containing but one argument, including (a) the complete form, where premises and conclusion are expressed, and (b) the incomplete (enthymeme), where one premise is to be supplied by the mind; or (2) combined (polysyllogism), containing several connected syllogisms, including (a) the complex (epichirema), where there is a principal syllogism to which all the rest are subordinate, and (b) the compound, where all are coordinate. The compound embrace the double, where a conclusion is made a premise for reaching a new conclusion, and the chain (sorites) made up of successive coordinate members. The hypothetical syllogism may also be (1) conditional (conjunctive) or (2) disjunctive, according as the reasoning turns on a conditional or disjunctive judgment in the major premise. A combination of the two gives rise to the dilemma. See DILEMMA.

2. Deductive as opposed to inductive reasoning. [< F. syllogisme, < L. syllogismus, < Gr. syllogismos, reasoning, < syllogizomai; see SYLLOGIZE.] sil'lo-gisme†.

syl"lo-gis'tic, sil"o-jis'tic, a. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of a syllogism; having the form or character of a syllogism; deductive, as opposed to inductive. [< L. syllogisticus, < Gr. syllogistikos, < syllogizomai; see SYLLOGIZE.] syl"lo-gis'tic-al‡.

— syl"lo-gis'tic, n. The art of reasoning by syllogism.— syl"lo-gis'tic-al-ly, adv.

syl"lo-gi-za'tion, sil"o-ji-zē'shun, n. [Rare.] Reasoning by syllogism. syl"lo-gi-sa'tion‡.

syl'lo-gize, sil'o-jiz, v. [-GIZED; -GI'ZING.] I. t. [Rare.] To draw conclusions from by syllogism.

II. i. 1. To reason by syllogism. 2. To reason harmoniously together; agree in reasoning. [< Gr. syllogizomai, < syn, together, + logizomai, reason, < logos, discourse, < legō, say.] syl'lo-gise‡.

— syl'lo-gi"zer, n.

sylph, silf, n. 1. Originally, in the system of Paracelsus, a being, male or female, living in and on the air and intermediate between material and immaterial beings; hence, a slender, graceful young woman or girl.

Hark! 'tis the laugh of Spring: she comes,
With airy sylphs and fiery gnomes.
LANDOR Miscellaneous st. 84.

2. A South-American humming-bird (genus Cyanolesbia) with a long, forked, brilliantly colored tail; as, the blue-tailed sylph (C. forficatus). [< F. sylphe, perhaps < Gr. silphē, beetle.]— sylph'-like", a. Like a sylph; slender and graceful; airy.

— sylph'in(e, a. Sylph-like. sylph'ish‡.

syl'pha, n. Same as SILPHA.

sylph'id, silf'id. I. a. Having qualities suggesting a sylph. II. n. A diminutive sylph; a young sylph. [< F. sylphide, < sylphe; see SYLPH.] sylph'ide‡.

syl'va, sil'vą, n. [SYL'VAS OR SYL'VÆ, sil'vī or -vē, pl.] 1. The forest-trees, collectively, of a territory or region. 2. A treatise on forest-trees, or a description or list of the forest-trees of a region. 3. pl. The materials for thought and composition; subject-matter; objects of observation; a word used in some old rhetorics. [< L. silva, forest.] sil'va‡.

syl'vage†, n. The state or quality of being sylvan.

syl'van, sil'vun, a. 1. Pertaining to, characteristic of, or abounding in groves or forests; forest-like; hence, rustic; rural; as, sylvan shades; sylvan scenes; a sylvan abode. 2. Of or pertaining to a sylva. [< L. silvanus, < silva, forest.] sil'van‡.

Synonyms: see RUSTIC.

— syl'van-ly, adv. sil'van-ly‡.

syl'van¹, n. A fabled spirit or deity of the woods; satyr; faun; also, sometimes, a rustic; clown. [< SYLVAN, a.] sil'van‡.

syl'van², n. Mineral. Native tellurium. [< SYLVANITE.]

syl'vane, sil'vēn, n. Chem. A liquid hydrocarbon compound (C_8H_8O) obtained from the dry distillation of pine-wood. Called more properly methyl furfurane. [< SYLVA + FURFURANE, < L. furfur, bran.]

syl'van-ite, sil'vun-īt, n. Mineral. A metallic, steel-gray to silver-white gold or silver tellurid, $(AuAg)Te_2$, crystallizing in the monoclinic system. When the crystals are arranged regularly so as to simulate symbols, called graphic gold, graphic tellurium. [< -sylvan- in Transylvania.] sil'van-ite‡.

syl-va'ni-um†, n. Chem. Tellurium: an old name.

syl'vate, sil'vēt, n. A salt of sylvic acid.

syl-ves'tral, sil-ves'tral, a. [Rare.] Sylvan; wild. [< F. sylvestre, < L. silvestris, < silva, forest.] syl-ves'ter†; syl-ves'tri-an‡.

Syl-ves'tri-an, n. Ch. Hist. A monk of a Benedictine order founded in Osimo, Italy, by Sylvester de' Gozzolini in 1231, and approved by Pope Innocent IV. in 1248. Syl-ves'trine‡.

syl'vi-an¹, sil'vi-un. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Sylviidæ. II. n. One of the Sylviidæ.

Syl'vi-an², a. Of or named after the anatomist Jacques Dubois, in Latin Jacobus Sylvius (1478-1555).

— Sylvian aqueduct, the aqueduct of Sylvius. See AQUEDUCT. — S. artery, a large branch of the internal carotid artery that lies in the Sylvian fissure; the middle cerebral artery. — S. fissure, the fissure of Sylvius. See FISSURE. — S. fossa, the deep pit at the base of the brain at the beginning of the Sylvian fissure.

syl'vic, sil'vic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from wood. [< L. silva, forest.]— sylvic acid, a colorless crystalline compound ($C_{20}H_{30}O_2$) contained in common resin or colophony: improperly abietic acid.

Syl"vi-col'i-dæ, sil"vi-col'i-dī or -kō'li-dē, n. pl. Ornith. The Muiotiltidæ. Syl-vic'o-la, n. (t. g.) [< L. sylvicola, living in forests, < silva, forest, + colo, live.]

— Syl"vi-co-li'næ, n. pl. Ornith. The Sylvicolidæ as a subfamily.— syl-vic'o-line(, a. & n.

syl'vi-cul"ture, sil'vi-cul"chur or -tūr, n. The planting and cultivation of forest-trees. [< L. silva, forest, + CULTURE.] — syl"vi-cul'tur-al, a. — syl"vi-cul'tur-ist, n.

Syl-vi'i-dæ, sil-vī'i-dī or -vī'i-dē, n. pl. Ornith. A family of oscine birds, especially those having 10 primaries, tarsi scutellate and longer than middle toes, and the bill slender and notched near the end; warblers. Syl'vi-a, n. (t. g.) [< L. silva, sylva, forest.] Syl'vi-dæ‡.

— syl-vi'id, n. — syl'vi-oid, a. — syl'vi-i-form", a. 1. Having the form of a sylviid or warbler. 2. Of or pertaining to the Sylviiformes.

Syl"vi-i-for'mes, sil'vi-i-fôr'mīz or -mēs, n. pl. Ornith. A phalanx of cichlomorphic birds, including Sylviidæ and many similar birds. [< SYLVIA + L. forma, form.]

Syl"vi-i'næ, sil'vi-ī'nī or -ī'nē, n. pl. Ornith. A subfamily of Sylviidæ, especially those with wings longer than the tail, and nostrils exposed; typical warblers. [< SYLVIA.] — syl'vi-in(e, a. & n.

syl'vite, sil'vait, n. Mineral. A vitreous, white, soluble potassium chlorid (KCl), crystallizing in the isometric system. It is an important source of potassium salts. [< silvii in NL. sal digestivus sylvii, potassium chlorid.] syl'vin(e‡.

sym-, prefix. Same as SYN-: a form used before labials (b, f, m, p, ph). — sym-bleph'a-ron, n. Morbid adhesion of the eyelid to the eyeball.—sym-bleph"a-ro'sis, n. Abnormal adhesion of the eyelids to each other or to the eyeball.—sym-bor'o-dont. I. a. Having upper molars with external tubercles longitudinal and compressed, with subcrescentic section, and internal tubercles independent and conic. II. n. A fossil symborodont mammal.— Sym-bran'chi-a, n. pl. Ich. An order of physostomous fishes with a teleocephaloid cranium, exoccipital condyles, normal jaw-bones, and eel-like form, as Synbranchidæ.— Sym-bran'chi-i‡. — sym'branch, n. — sym-bran'chous, a. — sym-bran'chi-ate. I. a. 1. Having the gill-openings confluent under the neck. 2. Of or pertaining to the Symbranchia. II. n. One of the Symbranchia. — Sym-bran'chi-dæ, n. pl. The Synbranchidæ. Sym-bran'chus, n. (t. g.) — sym-bran'chid, n.— sym-bran'choid, a. — sym-pal'mo-graph, n. An instrument, as a double pendulum, by which to form and exhibit Lissajous's sound-curves. See CURVE. — sym-pel'mous, a. Ornith. Having the tendons of the flexor muscles of the toes partly united, as in trogons: opposed to schizopelmous. — sym-pep'sis, n. The ripening of the humors of inflammation. — sym-pet'al-ous, a. Bot. Having united petals; gamopetalous. — sym"phe-nom'e-non, n. [-EN-A, pl.] A phenomenon resembling or accompanying another phenomenon exhibited by the same object. — sym"phe-nom'e-nal, a. — sym"phy-an'ther-ous, a. Bot. Same as SYNANTHEROUS. — sym"phy-car'pous†, a. Bot. Having confluent fruit.—sym-phyl'lous, a. Bot. Same as GAMOPHYLLOUS.—sym-phys'i-a, n. A malformation produced by the union of parts naturally asunder. — sym-phys'i-on, n. A craniometrical point. See CRANIOMETRY. — sym"phy-so-dac-tyl'i-a, n. Pathol. An abnormal union of the fingers.— sym'phy-tism, n. Gram. The coalescence of word-elements.—sym-plec'tic. I. a. Weaving or joining together: specifically said of the symplectic. II. n. A bone of the suspensorium of many fishes, connecting the quadrate with the hyomandibular.—sym'ple-site, n. Mineral. A pearly, vitreous, indigo, green, translucent, hydrous iron arsenate ($H_6Fe_3As_2O_{10}$), crystallizing in the monoclinic system.— Sym"plo-car'pus, n. Bot. A monotypic genus of ill-smelling herbs of the arum family (Araceæ). S. fœtidus, of America, Asia, and Japan, is the skunk-cabbage. See illus. under SKUNK-CABBAGE.—sym-plo'ci-um, n. Bot. The annulus of the sporangium in ferns: a disused term.—sym-po'lar, a. Geom. So related that to each summit, edge, and face of the one corresponds respectively a face, edge, and summit of the other: said of polyhedra.— symp"te-ryg'i-um, n. The sum total of the pterygia.

The Sympelmous Foot of a Trogon.

fpd, flexor perforans digitorum; flh, flexor longus hallucis; I-IV, first to fourth toes.

sy-mar', n. Same as SIMAR. sy-marr'‡.

sym'bal†, n. Same as CYMBAL.

sym'bi-on, sim'bi-on, n. [SYM'BI-A, pl.] An organism living in a state of symbiosis. [< Gr. symbioō (ppr. symbiōn), dwell together, < syn, together, + bios, life.]

sym'bi-ont‡.

sym"bi-o'sis, sim"bi-ō'sis, n. Biol. The consortism or living together of dissimilar organisms, each dependent on the other. A lichen represents such a case of consortism between an alga and a fungus, the former of which can and the latter of which can not live independently. [< Gr. symbiōsis, < syn, together, + bios, life.]

— sym"bi-ot'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or living in a state of symbiosis.— sym"bi-ot'ic-al-ly, adv.

sym'bol, sim'bol, vt. [Rare.] To symbolize.

sym'bol¹, n. 1. Something that (not being a portrait) stands for something else and serves either to represent it or to bring to mind one or more of its qualities; especially, something so used to represent or suggest that which is not capable of portraiture, as an idea, a quality, state, or action; an emblem; a type; as, the oak is a symbol of strength, the sword of slaughter, the trident of Neptune, white of purity.

A symbol is chosen either arbitrarily or on account of some supposed resemblance between it and that which it symbolizes.

The cock is a symbol of fire, and it is even to this day a common expression among the Norsemen, when a fire breaks out, that the red cock is crowing over the roof of the house. R. B. ANDERSON Norse Mythology pt. iii, ch. 1, p. 421. [S. C. G. '79.]

2. A character, mark, abbreviation, or letter representing or indicating something, as an operation, relation, or quantity in mathematics, a substance in chemistry, a planet or relation of bodies in astronomy, etc.; any significant mark or character. 3. Theol. A formal and authoritative statement of religious doctrine; a confession of faith; creed. See CONFESSION, 3. 4. Numis. A character or device in the field of a coin, distinct from Symbols.

1. Christian symbols: a, a form of the cross, symbolical of the second person of the Trinity; b, the hand, symbolical of the first person of the Trinity; c, the dove, symbolical of the third person of the Trinity; the symbols of the four evangelists: d, a man, representing Matthew; e, an ox, Luke; f, an eagle, John; g, a lion, Mark. 2. An Oriental form of the tree of life. 3. The fylfot symbol: a, an Arabian form; b, a Scandinavian form; c, the Phenician tau; d, a Hindu form (swastika); e, an English form. 4. The solar symbol: a, the circle-symbol of the sun (from an early British gold cup); b, the wheel-symbol of Buddha (from the Amravati Tope); c, the wheel- and -cross symbol in an early Gaulish coin; d, a cruciform nimbus (from a medieval carving). 5. Greek and Roman mythological symbols: a, the thunderbolt of Jupiter; b, the owl of Minerva; c, the caduceus of Mercury; d, the club of Hercules. 6. The ansated cross (crux ansata), an Egyptian symbol of life. 7. The serpent, symbol of eternity. 8. Japanese symbols used on pottery, embroideries, etc.: a, an anchor, symbol of security; b, the closed makimono, symbol of wisdom; c, the sacred balls on a stand, symbol of the soul; d, a symbol of good luck. 9. The international weather-symbols: a, rainfall; b, snowfall; c, hailstones; d, sleet; e, silver frost; f, glazed frost; g, ice-needles; h, drifting snow; i, snow covering; k, fog; l, high haze; m, dew; n, hoar frost; o, strong wind; p, thunder-storm; r, heat-lightning; s, solar aureola or corona; t, lunar aureola or corona; u, solar halo; v, lunar halo; w, rainbow; x, auroral lights. 10. Astronomical symbols: a, the sun; b, Mercury; c, Venus (in zoology signifying female); d, the earth; e, the moon; f, farthest north; g, farthest south; h, Mars (in zoology signifying male); i, Jupiter; k, Saturn; l, Uranus; m, Neptune; n, conjunction; o, quadrature; p, opposition, 180° from the sun; r, ascending node; s, descending node. See illus. under CHRISMON, FYLFOT, MON, MONOGRAM, ROUELLE, and TRIDENT.

the main device: found principally in Greek coins, often as the personal mark of the official in charge of the coinage. [< F. symbole, < L. symbolus, < Gr. symbolon, < syn, together, + ballō, throw.]

— sym'bol-print"ing, n. Teleg. Printing in cipher, as dots and dashes, instead of alphabetic characters.

sym'bol²†, n. Something contributed to a common supply or treasury; share; hence, allotment; adjudication.

sym-bol'a-try, n. Same as SYMBOLOLATRY.

sym-bol'ic, sim-bol'ic, -al, a. 1. Of or pertaining to a symbol or symbols; serving as a sign; emblematic; as, symbolical language or characters.

In very early Art we find colours used in a symbolical or mystic sense. MRS. JAMESON Sacred and Legendary Art vol. i, intro., § 5, p. 35. [L. G. & CO. '74.]

2. Gram. Serving as signs of relation or connection; relational; connective: opposed to presentive; said of certain classes of words, as prepositions and conjunctions. 3. Math. Involving the use of symbols of operation. 4. Logic. Failing to suggest their own marks: said of terms. Compare NOTATIVE.

— symbolical books, books containing the symbols or confessions of a church; specifically, those containing the Lutheran confessions. See LUTHERAN CHURCH. — symbolic geometry, a form of analytic geometry in which equations and operations are represented by symbols, and then these are treated as subject to algebraic operations. — s. philosophy, philosophy expressed in hieroglyphs.

sym-bol'ics, sim-bol'ics, n. The science or study of symbols or symbolic rites. Especially: (1) Theol. The branch of Christian theology that treats of creeds and confessions. (2) Anthrop. The branch of antiquities that treats of mystic ceremonies and rites. sym-bol'ic‡.

sym'bol-ism, sim'bol-izm, n. 1. Representation by symbols; treatment of things as symbolic; also, the quality of being symbolic.

Symbolism has never been favourable to art as art: the noblest type of the human form, which is the highest aim of art, has never been striven for under the sway of symbolism.
J. B. ATKINSON An Art Tour ch. 13, p. 383. [MACM. '73.]

2. A system of symbols or symbolical representations.

The perfect simplicity and sincerity of Moslem worship appeals to the Quaker element in my own blood; so, when I enter a mosque, the signs of race and climate and the symbolism of faith fade away, and I only remember that we are fellow-believers in the One God. B. TAYLOR Egypt, etc., in 1874 pt. 1, ch. 4, p. 42. [G. P. P. '74.]

sym'bol-ist, sim'bŏl-ist, n. One who uses symbols; one versed in the interpretation or use of symbols.—sym"bol-is'tic, a. Expressed by symbols; characterized by the use of symbols. sym"bol-is'tic-al‡, sym'bol-ize, sim'bŏl-iz, v. [-IZED; -I'ZING.] I. t. 1. To embody or represent symbolically; typify; said of the thing used as a symbol or emblem; as, the lamb symbolizes innocence. 2. To represent by symbols. 3. To make or consider symbolic; treat as figuratively representative. 4. To formulate into a creed or confession of faith; as, the Council of Nicea symbolized the orthodox faith. 5†. To make to agree in properties.

II. i. 1. To employ symbols; make use of symbolic representation. 2. To formulate creeds or beliefs. 3. [Archaic.] To have or acquire a likeness, as in qualities, properties, faith, or doctrine; agree; harmonize.

Socrates thinks with the Christian: Mr. Volney, with the deist. Shall we symbolize with the Greek or with the Frank?
G. S. FABER Difficulties of Infidelity § 1, p. 15. [R. '33.]

sym-bol'o-gy, sim-bol'o-ji, n. The art of representing by symbols; also, a treatise on symbols. [< Gr. symbolon (see SYMBOL[1], n.) + -LOGY.] sym"bol-ol'o-gy‡.—sym"bo-log'ic-al, a.—sym"bo-log'ic-al-ly, adv.—sym-bol'o-gist, n.

sym"bol-ol'a-try, sim'bŏl-ol'a-tri, n. Symbol-worship; undue or superstitious veneration of symbols or religious creeds. [< Gr. symbolon (see SYMBOL[1], n.) + latreia; see LATRIA.] sym-bol'a-try‡.

sym'bo-lon†, n. Same as SYMBOL[2]. sym'bo-lum†.

sym'bol-ry, sim bŏl ri, n. The use of symbols; symbols collectively; as, heraldic symbolry.

Sym-ma'chi-an, sim-ē ki-an or -mak'i-an, n. Ch. Hist. One of a sect in imperial Rome that taught a Persian asceticism; attributed to Symmachus the Ebionite (2d century A. D.).

sym-me'di-an, sim-mī'di-an, a. Math. Situated at the intersection of the three median lines of a triangle: said of a point. [< SYM- + MEDIAN[2], a.] sym'me-les, sim'ē-liz or -lēs, n. pl. Teral. A class of monsters whose lower extremities are united. [< Gr. symmelēs, in unison, < syn, together, + melos, limb.]—sym-me'li-a, n. Any form of monstrosity in which the limbs are united or blended together.

sym'met-ral, sim'et-ral, a. Of or pertaining to symmetry; symmetrical; commensurable.

sym-met'ri-an, sim met'ri-an, E. Wr. (si-met'ri-an, C.; sim tri'an, W.), n. Rare. A symmetrist.

Great men or men of great gifts you shall easily find, but symmetrical men never. EMERSON Essays, Nominalist and Realist in second series, p. 184. [R. H. R. & CO. '90.]

2. Math. Exhibiting mathematical symmetry, as a figure, also, so situated with respect to some other figure or figures that all taken collectively show such symmetry. 3. Bot. Having parts or organs on one side corresponding to those on the other; having parts regularly arranged. 4. Bot. Regular as to number or shape of parts: said especially of a flower when the parts or divisions in each cycle (that is, the sepals, petals, stamens, and pistils) are of the same number or multiples of the same. [< F. symétrique, < Gr. symmetrikos, < symmetria, symmetry, < syn, with, + metron, measure.] sym-met'ric‡.—sym-met'ric-al-ly, adv.—sym-met'ric-al-ness, n.

sym'met-rist, sim'et-rist, n. One who is studious of or skilled in symmetry. sym"met-ri'cian‡ [Rare].

sym'met-rize, sim'et-rīz, vt [-RIZED; -RI'ZING.] To make symmetrical or proportional. sym'met-rise‡, sym"met-ri-za' or -sa'tion, n.

sym'met-roid, sim'et-roid, a. Geom. A surface of the fourth order whose equation is obtained by equating to zero a symmetrical determinant of that order whose elements are linear functions of homogeneous point-coordinates. [< Gr. symmetria (see SYMMETRICAL) + -OID.]

sym"met-ro-pho'bi-a, sim'et-ro fō'bi-a, n. [Humorous.] Dread or avoidance of architectural or structural symmetry, especially as shown in the temple-architecture of the Egyptians and in Japanese art.

We find a remarkable instance of what Sir Gardner Wilkinson has ingeniously called the symmetrophobia of the Egyptians. This conceit is bounded on one side by large columns, . . . but on the other side, instead of similar columns we find massive stone pillars.
MARIETTE-BEY Monuments of Upper Egypt tr. by A. Mariette, pt. iii, ch. 4, p. 211. TR. & CO. '77.]

sym"met-ri-pho'bi-a‡.

sym'met-ry, sim'et-ri, n. [-RIES, pl.] 1. Due arrangement or balancing of the parts or elements of a whole with reference to one another in making up that whole; relative proportion and harmony; hence, loosely, congruity; consistency; harmony; also, an instance of such arrangement or balancing; as, the symmetries of Seneca. 2. Esthetics. The element of beauty in nature or art that results from such arrangement and balancing; perfection of related forms in the making up of a harmonious whole. In its lower form symmetry may involve only repetition, radiation, simple rhythm, or spacing, but in its higher forms it involves distribution, proportion, congruity and harmony, and free balancing of parts in relation to a totality or whole.

Akin to this beauty of proportion is the beauty of Symmetry, which is founded more immediately on the relation of the parts to one another. H. N. DAY Esthetics § 72, p. 76. [C. C. C. '72.]

3. Bud. (1) Anat. & Zool. Regular arrangement of parts or organs so that a division will give similar halves; similarity of structure; as, bilateral symmetry; radial symmetry; serial symmetry. Symmetry appears in three forms, bilateral, radial, and serial. See phrases. (2) Bot. Equality of number in the whorls of a flower, as of sepals, petals, etc. See SYMMETRICAL. 4. Math. An arrangement of pairs of points in a general system, such that the set of lines joining them together is divided into equal parts by a line (the axis of symmetry), or by a plane (plane of s.), or by a point (the center of s.). 5. Crystal. The symmetrical distribution of non-parallel but equivalent directions (faces, edges, etc.) in a crystal with reference to certain planes or lines called planes or axes of symmetry. The grade of symmetry is determined by the number of non-parallel equivalent directions which a given crystal possesses. There are only thirty-two crystal classes possible having different grades of symmetry. 6. [Archaic.] Beauty; fine appearance.

Who marks in church-time others' symmetry,
Makes all their beauty his deformity.
HERBERT The Temple. Church Porch st. 70.

[< F. symétrie, < L. symmetria, < Gr. symmetria; see SYMMETRICAL.]

Synonyms: agreement, conformity, harmony, order, parity, proportion, regularity, shapeliness. See HARMONY.—Antonyms: deformity, discordance, disproportion, shapelessness.

Phrases:—axial symmetry, the symmetry produced when to every point or part of a body or figure on one side of a line called the axis of symmetry corresponds a like point or part at an equal distance on the other side of the line.—bilateral s., see BILATERAL.—kinetic s., equality of the moments of inertia of a body about all axes through the center of inertia.—radial s., see RADIAL, a., and SYMMETRY, n., 3.—respective s., symmetry in which only the opposite sides are equal.—right s., symmetry in which the lines joining corresponding points are at right angles to the plane or axis of symmetry.—skew s., the symmetry of hemihedral crystals, as of the trapezohedral crystals of quartz.—s. as to a plane, the symmetry produced when every point or part on one side of a plane has a corresponding point or part at an equal distance on the other side.

sym'morph", sim'mōrf', n. A character differing in form from another or others, but standing for the same notion. Compare HOMOMORPH. [< Gr. symmorphos, similar, < syn, with, + morphē, form.]

sym"pa-thet'ic, sim"pa-thet'ic, a. 1. Pertaining to, resulting from, or attended by sympathy; expressive of sympathy; as, sympathetic aid; sympathetic verses. 2. Having a fellow-feeling for or like feelings with another or others; susceptible of sympathy; sympathizing; as, a sympathetic person. 3. Being in accord or harmony; concordant; congenial. 4. Physiol. Pertaining to, dependent upon, or proceeding from sympathy; as, sympathetic disturbance of an organ or a part, due to some morbid reaction of another organ primarily diseased. 5. Suggestive of or acting as if through sympathy (see SYMPATHY, 5); as, sympathetic ink.

S. BUTLER Hudibras pt. ii, can. 3, l. 296.

6. Physics. Produced, as a vibration, by accumulated impulses from another vibration of the same or harmonic period; of or pertaining to vibrations so produced; exhibiting resonance, as in acoustics, electricity, etc. [< Gr. sympathētikos, < sympatheia, sympathy, < syn, with; and see -PATHY.] sym"pa-thet'ic-al‡.

Phrases:—sympathetic headache, headache due to disturbance in some other part of the system.—s. nerve, a nervous cord, formed of filaments derived from the spinal nerves, that connects a series of ganglia situated on either side of the spine.—s. nervous system, the nervous system formed by the sympathetic nerve with its ganglia, the branches which it sends to the viscera, and the plexuses which they form. The sympathetic system embraces (1) a central part consisting of a series of ganglia situated each side of the spine and connected by a nervous cord, (2) nerves that pass from this chain to the viscera, and (3) plexuses formed by these nerves either about the vessels or within the substance of the viscera, which plexuses contain numerous small ganglia.—s. numbers, numbers supposed to have a natural tendency to occur together.—s. powder, powder formerly supposed to have the property of curing a wound if applied to the weapon inflicting it, or to a piece of the blood-stained garment.—s. sounds, sounds produced by sympathetic vibrations.—s. string, a musical string vibrated by the vibrations of another string.

The Sympathetic Nervous System.

a, the sympathetic nerve, or interganglionic cord; b, ciliary ganglion; c, sphenopalatine ganglion; d, e, f, superior middle and inferior cervical ganglia; g, h, greater and lesser splanchnic nerves; i, pharyngeal plexus, k, recurrent laryngeal nerve; l, bronchial plexus; m, cardiac plexus, n, œsophageal plexus; o, coronary plexus; p, pneumogastric nerve; q, gastric plexus; r, solar plexus; s, superior mesenteric plexus; t, aortic plexus, u, inferior mesenteric plexus; v, hypogastric plexus; w, hemorrhoidal plexus; x, bladder; y, vesical plexus.

sym"pa-thet'ic-al-ly, adv.—sym"pa-thet'i-cism, n. A tendency, especially if excessive or morbid, to sympathize with others.—sym"pa-thet'i-cus, n. [-CI, -sī or -ci, pl.] The sympathetic nerve.

sym'pa-thism, sim'pa-thizm, n. Direct and instantaneous communication between different persons of subjective sensations, as pain or emotions.

sym'pa-thist, sim'pa-thist, n. [Rare.] A sympathizer; also, one susceptible to sympathism.

sym'pa-thize, sim'pa-thīz, v. [-THIZED; -THI'ZING.] I. i. 1. To be affected with feelings corresponding to the feelings of another; feel in consequence of what another feels; share the sentiments or mental states of another: followed by with or in; as, the true critic must sympathize with the author; to sympathize in sorrow or joy. 2. To be stirred to some emotion or put in some mood deemed correspondent with external phenomena; be in harmony with or sensitive to outside influences; as, Wordsworth sympathized with the placidity of nature.

There are, however, a few men, and perhaps Shakspeare stands at their head, who truly sympathize with something out of themselves. H. N. HUDSON Lect. on Shakspeare vol. i, lect. ii, p. 66. [B. & SCR. '48.]

3. To be affected in one part in consequence of the condition of another part; suffer sympathetically; as, the head sympathizes with the stomach; the eyes sympathize with each other.

The digestive organs, unfortunately, are the first to sympathize with any mental worry.
N. E. YORKE-DAVIES in Annals of Hygiene Sept., '93, p. 534.

4. [Colloq.] To give expression to one's sympathy, as with another's grief or affliction; condole. 5. To be concordant; agree; harmonize. 6†. To have similar characters or qualities; be alike.

II†. t. 1. To have or feel sympathy for; share in. 2. To form or contrive with congruity or consistency. 3. To correspond or answer to. [< F. sympathiser, < L. sympathia; see SYMPATHY.] sym'pa-thise‡.

Synonyms: see CONSOLE; PITY.

sym'pa-thy†, vi. To sympathize.

sym'pa-thy, sim'pa-thi, n. [-THIES, pl.] 1. The quality of being affected by the state or condition of another with feelings correspondent in kind or correlative with those present in that person; fellow-feeling.

Sympathy is the universal solvent. Nothing is understood without it. ARTHUR HELPS Friends in Council first series, vol. i, ch. 5, p. 77. [JAS. M.]

2. Specifically, a feeling of compassion for another's sufferings or evils; pity; commiseration; as, sympathy for the poor; all misfortune is a claim to sympathy. 3. An agreement of affections or inclinations, or a conformity of natural temperament, which makes persons agreeable to one another; harmony; accord; as, they are in sympathy with each other. 4. Pathol. (1) The relation of one organ or part with another more or less remote, through which an unaffected organ or part becomes secondarily disordered from disease existing in some other part without actual transmission of the morbific cause. (2) The quality or state of transmitting certain pathological conditions of one person to others, as in hysteria, gaping, etc. See SYMPATHISM. 5. That quality of inanimate things by virtue of which they attract, influence, or tend toward one another, or are supposed to do so; affinity; a sense once much used in alchemy and astrology; as, the sympathy of the lodestone for iron; the sympathy of the adjective for the noun. 6. Physics. A relation between two bodies such that the vibration of one causes a sympathetic vibration of the other. 7†. Correspondence; agreement; also, suggestive association. [< L. sympathia. < Gr. sympatheia; see SYMPATHETIC.]

Synonyms: see BENEVOLENCE; PITY.—Prepositions: sympathy with another in joy or grief; sympathy for the needy in their distress; sympathy between kindred spirits.

sym'phan†, vi. To play on a symphan.

sym'phan†, n. Same as SYMPHONY, 3.

sym-pho'ni-a, sim-fō'ni-a, n. 1. Same as SYMPHONY, 1. 2. In ancient Greek music, concord; consonance. 3†. Same as SYMPHONY, 3. [L., < Gr. symphōnia; see SYMPHONION.]

sym-phon'ic, sim-fon'ic, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or characterized by symphony; symphonious. 2. Mus. Pertaining to or resembling a symphony. 3. Of the same sound, as words; homonymous. sym"phonet'ic‡.—symphonic poem, an orchestral composition in symphonic style, illustrating a poetic story or idea, but not divided into separate movements.

sym-pho'ni-on, sim-fō'ni-on, n. A former musical instrument combining the characters of the pianoforte and the harmonium. [< Gr. symphōnia, symphony, < syn, together, + phōnē, sound.]

sym-pho'ni-ous, sim-fō'ni-us, a. 1. [Archaic.] Marked by symphony; characterized by harmony of sound.

ERASMUS DARWIN Botanic Garden, Econ. of Veg. can. 1, l. 24.

2. Pertaining to a symphony; symphonic.

sym'pho-nist, sim'fo-nist, n. One who composes symphonies.

sym'pho-nize†, vi. To be in harmony. sym'pho-nise†.

sym'pho-ny, sim'fo-ni, n. [-NIES, pl.] 1. A harmonious or agreeable mingling of sounds, whether vocal, instrumental, or both: used figuratively of concord, harmony, or agreeable blending of any kind; as, symphonies in gray; a lyric symphony of Tennyson.

Symphonies in dancing, symphonies in canoes on still water behind guardian reefs, . . . symphonies spoken in prayer to God by great congregations.
E. E. HALE Ten Times One Is Ten ch. 7, p. 114. [R. BROS. '71.]

2. Mus. (1) A sonata for orchestra. (2) An instrumental prelude, interlude, or postlude; a ritornelle.

Symphonies, up to the 17th century, were instrumental passages thrown into relief in works where interest centered chiefly in the vocalization. The development of orchestral overtures and ritornelli gave rise to that highest form of instrumental composition now known as the symphony. Bach, Haydn, and Beethoven raised this style of music to distinct and classic form, in which there were three movements, allegro, andante, and scherzo, to which later composers added others. The greatest modern symphonists are Schumann and Brahms. Liszt gave himself more freedom of form and movement, calling his productions symphonic poems. See SONATA.

3†. One of several distinct musical instruments, as the virginal, hurdy-gurdy, or bagpipe. sym"pho-nye'†. [< F. symphonie, < L. symphonia; see SYMPHONIA.]

Sym"phor-i-car'pos, sim'for-i-cär'pes, n. Bot. A genus of shrubs of the honeysuckle family (Caprifoliaceæ), having oval, short-petioled downy leaves, and short clusters of white or rose-colored flowers followed by fleshy white or red berries. The best-known are the coralberry (Symphoricarpos vulgaris), the wolfberry (S. occidentalis), and the widely cultivated snowberry (S. racemosus). [< Gr. symphoreō (see SYMPHORICARPOUS) + karpos, fruit.] Sym"phor-i-car'pus‡.

sym"phor-i-car'pous, sim'for-i-cär'pus, a. Bot. Bearing several fruits clustered together. [< Gr. symphoreō (< syn, together, + pherō, yield) + karpos, fruit.]

Sym'phy-la, sim'fi-la, n. pl. Entom. An order or suborder of insects related to typical Thysanura, but resembling chilopods and having many abdominal legs, as Scolopendrellidæ. [< Gr. symphylos, of the same race, < syn, together, + phylon, clan, < phyō, produce.]—sym'phy-lous, a.

sym'phy-note, sim'fi-nōt, a. Conch. Soldered together at the hinge, as the valves of some river-mussels.

symphyo-. Derived from Greek symphyomai (< syn, together, + phyō, grow): a combining form.—sym″phy-o-ceph′a-lus, n. A double monster united at the head.—sym″phy-o-gen′e-sis, n. Bot. The production of an organ or part by the union of elements previously separate.—sym″phy-o-ge-net′ic, a.—sym″phy-o-stem′o-nous, a. Bot. Having united stamens; monadelphous. sym″phy-stem′o-nous‡.

sym′phy-sis, sim′fi-sis, n. [-SES, -sīz or -sēs, pl.] 1. Anat. (1) The union of two parts of the skeleton, either by growing together (synostosis) or by the intervention of cartilage (synchondrosis); also, the place of union of such parts; as, the symphysis pubis. See illus. under PELVIS. (2) The union of parts normally separate. 2. Bot. The coalescence or union of similar parts. [< Gr. symphysis, union, < syn, together, + phyō, grow.]

—symphysis menti, s. of the jaw, or s. mandibulæ, the point of union of the two halves of the lower jaw on the median line.

—sym-phys′e-al, a. Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of symphysis or a symphysis. sym′phy-sal‡; sym-phys′i-al‡; sym-phys′i-an‡.—symphysian angle, see CRANIOMETRY.—sym-phys′e-o-tome, n. Surg. A knife especially adapted for the Sigaultian operation of cutting the pubic symphysis to facilitate labor.—sym-phys″e-ot′o-my, n. Surg. The operation of cutting through a symphysis, especially the symphysis pubis, to facilitate delivery when passage of the fetus is impossible without artificial intervention. sym-phys″i-ot′o-my‡; sym″phys-ot′o-my‡.

h, vessel containing hydrogen gas; o, colored oil, rising in the glass column to meet the gas; t, thermometer for use in making corrections.

sym″pi-es-om′e-ter, sim′pi-es-em′e-tėr, n. 1. An instrument for measuring the pressure or velocity of a current by the heights of fluid-level in two partially submerged curved tubes the upright parts of which are in a plane in line with the direction of the current, the submerged ends being placed, the one toward and the other away from the direction from which the current flows. 2. A barometer in which the atmospheric pressure is exerted directly on a short column of oil or similar liquid, causing compression of a portion of air or gas enclosed in the tube above the liquid: highly sensitive, but liable to derangement and large inaccuracies. [< Gr. sympiesis, compression (< syn, together, + piezō, squeeze), + metron, measure.] sym″pi-ez-om′e-ter‡.

sym′plo-ce, sim′plo-sē or -sē, n. Old Rhet. The repetition of a word or expression at the beginning and of another at the end of successive clauses. [< Gr. symplokē, intertwining, < syn, together, + plekō, twine.]

sym-po′di-a, sim-pō′di-ą, n. Terat. Same as SYMPUS.

sym-po′di-al, sim-pō′di-al, a. Bot. Of or pertaining to a sympodium.—sym-po′di-al-ly, adv.

sym-po′di-um, sim-pō′di-um, n. [-DI-A, pl.] Bot. A false axis or stem morphologically made up of a series of superposed branches imitating a simple stem. [< SYM- + Gr. pous (pod-), foot.] sym′pode‡.

A Sympodium.

a, a tendril (the true stem) of a grape-vine, pushed out of place by a branch (b) which has assumed the functions of a stem until the tip (the tendril c) is thrust out of the direct line of growth by the budding branch (d).

Finally, the terminal bud of a foliage-shoot, together with its growing-point, may periodically die off, the next lateral bud continuing the growth of the previous axis; in this way are formed sympodia, the stem of the Lime being an example.

J. VON SACHS Physiology of Plants tr. by H. M. Ward, lect. xxviii, p. 466. [CL. P. '87.]

sym-po′si-ac, sim-pō′zi-ac. 1. a. Pertaining to, of the nature of, or occurring at a symposium: specifically denoting convivial catches, glees, etc. [< L. symposiacus, < Gr. symposiakos, < symposion, symposium, < syn, together, + pinō, drink.] sym-po′si-al‡.

sym-po′si-ac, n. A symposium.

sym-po′si-arch, sim-pō′zi-ȧrc, n. The master or director of an ancient Greek symposium; hence, the master of a feast; a toast-master; familiarly, a ruling spirit of a social or convivial company. [< Gr. symposiarchēs, < symposion (see SYMPOSIAC) + archō, rule.]

sym-po′si-ast, sim-pō′zi-ast, n. [Colloq.] A member of a drinking-party. [< Gr. symposion; see SYMPOSIAC.]

sym-po′si-um, sim-pō′zi-um, n. [-SI-A, pl.] 1. A drinking together; a conversational feast or banquet.

Among the ancient Greeks the symposium followed the dinner, and was characterized by the drinking of wine mixed with water, by intellectual or entertaining conversation, and by music, dancing, and other amusements.

The symposium was the intellectual side of the feast. It consisted of general conversation, riddles, and convivial songs rendered to the accompaniment of the lyre passed from hand to hand.

MYERS Outlines Anc. Hist. pt. i, § 2, ch. 13, p. 353. [GINN & CO.]

2. Hence, a collection of comments or opinions brought together; especially, several brief essays or articles on the same subject by different writers, as in a magazine. [L., < Gr. symposion; see SYMPOSIAC.] sym-po′si-on‡.

symp′tom, simp′tom or -tum, n. 1. Med. A functional or vital phenomenon of disease; any perceptible change in any organ or function due to morbid conditions or to morbific influence, especially when regarded as an aid in diagnosis. Symptoms differ from signs in the diagnosis of disease in that the former are functional phenomena, while the latter are incidental or experimental.

2. That which serves to point out the existence of something else; any sign, token, or indication.

It may be deemed a symptom of wanting a thorough love of truth, when a man overrates, as much as when he overlooks, the difficulties he deals with. HALLAM Literature of Europe vol. ii, pt. ii, ch. 4, p. 131. [SH. & CO. '63.]

[< F. symptôme, < Gr. symptōma; see SYMPTOMATIZE.]

Synonyms; see MARK‡; SIGN.

—symp′tom-group″, n. A group of symptoms that occur together frequently. s.-complex‡.

symp″to-mat′ic, simp′to-mat′ic, a. 1. Pertaining to, of the nature of, or constituting a symptom or symptoms; indicative; as, a symptomatic fever; fever is symptomatic of inflammation. 2. According to symptoms; as, a symptomatic classification of diseases. [< F. symptomatique, < Gr. symptōmatikos, < symptōma(t-); see SYMPTOMATIZE.] symp″to-mat′ic-al‡.

—symp″to-mat′ic-al-ly, adv.

symp′to-ma-tize, simp′to-mą-tīz, vt. [-TIZED; -TI′ZING.] To be a symptom of; indicate by symptoms; indicate. [< Gr. symptōma(t-), symptom, < syn, with, + piptō, fall.]

symp″to-ma-tol′o-gy, simp′to-mą-tel′o-ji, n. Med. The branch of pathology that has for its object the observation and classification of symptoms. [< Gr. symptōma(t-) (see SYMPTOMATIZE) + -OLOGY.] symp″to-mol′o-gy‡.—symp″to-mat″o-log′ic-al, a.—symp″to-mat″o-log′ic-al-ly, adv.

symp-to′sis, simp-tō′sis, n. 1. Math. The meeting of polars of the same point with reference to different loci. 2. Gram. A coming together of vowels. 3. Pathol. The gradual collapse or wasting away of the whole body or of a part. [< F. symptose, < Gr. symptōsis, meeting, < syn, together, + piptō, fall.]

sym′pus, sim′pus, n. [SYM′PI, pl.] Terat. A monster having the lower extremities grown together. [< Gr. sympous, with the feet together, < syn, together, + pous, foot.]

syn-, prefix. With. [< L. syn-, < Gr. syn-, < syn, with. Before certain consonants syn- becomes syl-, sym-, sys-.] —syn-ac′my, n. Bot. The simultaneous maturity of the anthers and stigmas of a flower; synanthesis. Compare HETERACMY. syn-ac′me‡.—syn-ac′mic, a.—syn-ac′ral, a. Having a common vertex, as faces of a polyhedron.—syn″a-del′phic, a. Acting or working together, as members or organs of a body; concurrent.—syn″a-del′phite, n. Mineral. A vitreous to greasy-lustered, brownish-black to black, hydrous manganese-aluminum arsenate ($H_2Mn_2(Al,Mn)_2As_2O_{13}$), crystallizing in the monoclinic system.—syn″œr-e′ma, n. A wrinkled or rugose condition of the skin.—syn″es-the′si-a, n. Same as SYNESTHESIA.—syn-æ′tion, n. A morbific cause cooperating with some other in producing disease.—syn-al′gi-a, n. Sympathetic pain transmitted to a remote organ through associated relation, as lockjaw from a wound in the foot.—syn-al″lag-mat′ic, a. Mutually or reciprocally obligatory.—Syn-al″lax-i′næ, n. pl. Ornith. A subfamily of dendrocolaptoid birds with tail-feathers soft, tarsi and bill short. Compare illus. under OVEN-BIRD. Syn″al-lax′is, n. (t. g.)—syn-al′lax-in(e, a. & n.—syn″a-mœ′ba, n. A community of ameboid organisms.—Syn″an-ci′i-dæ, n. pl. Ich. A family of scorpænoidean fishes, especially those with prominent orbits and separated gill-openings. Syn-an′ci-a, n. (t. g.)—syn″an-ci′id, n.—syn-an′ci-oid, a. & n.—syn-an′gi-um, n. [-GI-A, pl.] 1. Bot. The boat-shaped sorus composed of confluent sporangia in marattiaceous ferns. 2. An arterial trunk; specifically, the terminal part of the truncus arteriosus of lower vertebrates. syn′angel‡.—syn-an′gi-al, a.—syn″an-the′sis, n. Bot. The simultaneous maturity of the anthers and stigmas of a flower; synacmy.—syn-an′thous, a. 1. Having the flowers and leaves developed at the same time. 2. Synanthic.—syn-an′throse″, n. Chem. A variety of sugar ($C_6H_{10}O_5$) from dahlia and other tubers. See SUGAR.—syn-an′thy, n. Bot. The adhesion of two or more flowers that are normally free.—syn-an′thic, a.—syn′a-phe, n. Gr. Mus. The conjunction of two tetrachords—syn-aph′i-pod, n. Crust. An appendage to a mandible; a palp.—Syn″a-pho-bran′chi-dæ, n. pl. Ich. A family of enchelycephalous eels with gill-openings partly united and branchiostegals short. Syn″a-pho-bran′chus, n. (t. g.)—syn″a-pho-bran′chid, n.—syn″a-pho-bran′choid, a. & n.—syn″a-phy″me-i′tis, n. Inflammation of the conjunctiva membrane of the eye.—syn-ap′tase, C. E. (syn′ap-tase, I. W.), n. Same as EMULSIN.—syn-ap′te, n. Gr. Ch. A form of supplicatory prayer; a litany.—Syn-ap′te-ra, n. pl. A superorder of insects including the Thysanura, Collembola, and Symphyla.—syn-ap′te-rous, a.—syn″ap-tic′u-la, n. [-LÆ, pl.] One of the transverse calcareous bars that pass between the septa of a coral, as in fungiids.—syn″ap-tic′u-lar, a.—Syn-ap′ti-dæ, n. pl. Echin. A family of apodous apneumonous holothurians, especially those with digitate tentacles and anchor-like calcareous bodies in the skin.—syn-ap′toid, n.—Syn-ap″to-sau′ri-a, n. pl. A superorder of reptiles, especially those having the quadrate united with the cranium by suture and one postorbital bar on each side: including Theromora, Plesiosauria, Ichthyopterygia, and Testudinata.—syn-ap″to-sau′ri-an, a. & n.—syn-ap′ty-chus, n. [-CHI, pl.] An aptychus of two fused pieces.—syn″ar-te′sis, n. A fastening or joining together; a close union; intimate connection.—syn″ar-tet′ic, a. Anc. Pros. Metrically continuous, or having the same rhythm throughout, as verse.—syn″ar-thro′di-al, a. Joined together so as to permit of no motion, as bones united by suture.—syn″ar-thro′di-al-ly, adv.—syn′a-scete, n. Gr. Ch. A friend or associate of a monk; a fellow ascetic.—Syn″as-cid′i-æ, n. pl. Ascid. The composite ascidians.—syn″a-throi′sis, n. An abnormal accumulation of blood in an organ; congestion. syn″a-throis′mus‡.—syn″au-gei′a, n. The part of any planetary surface where the sun is wholly visible above the horizon.—syn-au′li-a, n. Gr. Mus. A composition for flutes.—syn″ax-a′ri-on, n. [-RI-A, pl.] Gr. Ch. A lesson from lives of the saints read as part of a service; also, a book containing such lessons. syn-ax′ar‡; syn-ax′a-ry‡.—Syn″ax-id′e-a, n. pl. Crust. A tribe of trichobranchiate macrurans having second antennæ without scaphocerites, and without chelate pereiopods, including Palinuridæ and Scyllaridæ.—syn″ax-id′e-an, a. & n.—syn-ax′is, n. Ch. Hist. A congregation assembled for public worship, especially for celebrating the Lord's Supper.—Syn-bran′chi-dæ, n. pl. Ich. A family of eel-like fishes, especially ichthyocephalous Symbranchia with 4 branchiferous arches. Syn-bran′chus, n. (t. g.)—syn-bran′chid, n.—syn-bran′choid, a. & n.—syn-can′thus, n. Morbid adhesion between the eyeball and its surrounding parts.—Syn-car′i-des, n. pl. Crust. A Carboniferous suborder of malacostracous crustaceans without a carapace and with a dorsal arch of 7 thoracic segments, and schizopodous appendages.—syn″ca-rid′e-an, a. & n.—syn-ceph′a-lus, n. [-LI, pl.] A monster having a double body united at the head.—syn-cer′e-brum, n. A compound brain, as in insects.—syn-cer′e-bral, a.—syn-chil′i-a, n. Congenital imperforation of the lips; syncleisis.—syn″chon-dro′sis, n. Anat. A joining of two bones, nearly or quite immovable, in which the articulating surfaces are united by intervening cartilage, as in the spinal vertebræ, the symphysis pubis, etc. See illus. under JOINT.—syn″chon-dro′si-al, a.—syn″chon-drot′o-my, n. The operation of dividing bony parts connected by cartilage; symphyseotomy.—syn″cho-re′sis, n. Rhet. Concession for the purpose of retort, or to preclude an objection.—syn′chy-sis, n. A disease of the eye characterized by sparkling flakes appearing in the field of vision: due to cholesterin floating in the vitreous humor. syn′chi-sis‡.—syn-clit′ic, a. Obstet. Pertaining to synclitism; without lateral obliquity or flexion: opposed to enclitic.—syn-clit′i-cism, n. The lateral turning of the fetal head in a natural presentation at childbirth, thus bringing the cranial planes into parallelism with the planes of the maternal pelvis. syn′clit-ism‡.—syn′clo-nus, n. A chronic simultaneous spasm of several muscles; convulsion.—synclonus ballismus, trembling palsy; chorea.—Syn″co-ryn′i-dæ, n. pl. Zoöph. A family of tubulariidean hydroids with a coryniform trophosome and medusiform planoblasts, generally united with Corynidæ. Syn-cor′y-ne, n. (t. g.)—syn″co-ryn′id, n.—syn-cor′y-noid, a.—syn-cot″y-led′on-ous, a. Bot. Having coherent cotyledons.—syn″cran-te′ri-an, a. Having the back teeth continuous with the front, as certain serpents.—syn-det′ic, a. Serving to unite or connect; connective; copulative; opposed to asyndetic. syn-det′ic-al‡.—syn-det′ic-al-ly, adv.—syn′dro-me, n. [Rare.] 1. A concurrence of anything. 2. The concurring aggregate of symptoms manifested in diseases.—syn″e-chi′a, C. W.[2] (syn-e′chi-a, W.[1]), n. Morbid adhesion between the iris and the cornea (synechia anterior), or between the iris and the crystalline lens (synechia posterior).—syn-ec″pho-ne′sis, n. Same as SYNERESIS.—syn-ec′tic, a. 1. Connecting or holding together things of different nature. 2. Math. Continuous, finite, and uniform: said of a function.—syn″ec-tic′i-ty, n. The state or character of being synectic.—Syn″en-tog′na-thi, n. pl. Ich. A suborder of teleocephalous fishes with a closed air-bladder, spineless fins, and united lower pharyngeals: including flying-fishes and garfishes.—syn-en′tog-nath, a. & n.—syn″en-tog′na-thous, a.—syn″es-the′si-a, n. 1. Physiol. Translated sensation; sensation produced at a point different from the point of stimulation. 2. Pathol. Same as SYNALGIA. syn″æs-the′si-a‡.—syn′e-sthere, n. A tree-porcupine (genus Synetheres).—Syn-eth″e-ri′næ, n. pl. Mam. An American subfamily of hystricoid rodents with rooted molars, complete clavicles, and tail mostly prehensile; American porcupines. Syn-eth′e-res, n. (t. g.)—syn-eth′e-rin(e, a. & n.—syn″e-zi′sis, n. Congenital closure of an organ. syn″i-ze′sis‡.—syn-gen′ic, a. Congenital; as, a syngenic disease.—syn′ge-nite, n. Mineral. A vitreous, colorless or white, hydrous calcium-potassium sulfate ($H_2CaK_2S_2O_9$), crystallizing in the monoclinic system.—Syng′na-tha, n. pl. Ich. A suborder of lophobranchiate fishes with a tubular mouth and no ventrals, including pipefishes and sea-horses.—syng′nath, n.—Syng-nath′i-dæ, n. pl. Ich. A family of lophobranchiate fishes, especially Syngnathi with a long straight body and non-prehensile tail; pipefishes. See illus. under PIPEFISH. Syng′na-thus, n. (t. g.)—syng-nath′id, n.—syng′na-thoid, a. & n.—syng′na-thous, a. Of or pertaining to the Syngnathi or the Syngnathidæ.—syn″go-nid′i-um, n. [-I-A, pl.] Bot. A cluster or agglomeration of gonidia.—syn″go-nim′i-um, n. [-I-A, pl.] Bot. A cluster or agglomeration of gonimia.—syn′graph, n. Canon Law. An instrument of writing executed under hand and seal of all the parties thereto, originally in duplicates, having an intermediate word cut in two, instead of indentations. See INDENTURE, 1.—syn′i-dro′sis, n. A concomitant or concurrent sweating.—syn″neu-ro′sis, n. Same as SYNDESMOSIS.—syn′o-cha, n. Inflammatory continued fever; general inflammation; as, synocha rheumatica (acute rheumatism).—syn′o-chal, a.—syn′o-choid, a. Pertaining to or resembling synocha; as, synochoid fever.—syn′o-chus, n. Continued fever, partaking of the characteristics of both inflammatory and typhus fever; mixed fever.—syn′o-cil, n. Spong. A cone-like aggregate of multipolar cells, each with a long filament, supposed to function as an eye.—syn-oc′re-ate, a. Bot. Having stipules united on the opposite side of the stem, embracing it in a sheath, as in the knotweed, smartweed, and other plants of the buckwheat family.—Syn″o-don′ti-dæ, n. pl. Ich. A family of malacopterygian fishes, especially those with supramaxillaries aborted and no phosphorescent or pearly spots: including the lizard-fishes. Syn′o-dus, n. (t. g.)—syn″o-don′tid, n.—syn″o-don′toid, a. & n.—syn′o-mo-sy, n. Gr. Antiq. A political club or body of oath-bound partizans; hence, a secret brotherhood bound by oath; a conspiracy.—syn″oph-thal′mi-a, n. Same as CYCLOPIA‡. syn″oph-thal′mus‡.—syn-oph′y-ty, n. Bot. The adhesion of two or more embryos in a seed.—syn″os-to′sis, n. Anat. Same as SYNOSTEOSIS.—syn″os-tot′ic, a.—syn-o′ti-a, n. A form of monstrosity in which the ears are united.—syn-o′tus, n. A double monster united above the umbilicus, with the ears placed opposite to the face.—syn″o-vi′tis, n. Inflammation of a synovial membrane.—syn-pel′mous, a. Same as SYMPELMOUS.—syn″sar-co′sis, n. Same as SYSSARCOSIS.—syn-sep′al-ous, a. Bot. Having united sepals; gamosepalous.—syn′sperm-y, n. Bot. The union of two or more seeds normally free.—syn-tag′ma-tite, n. Mineral. The pure aluminous orthosilicate molecule, used to explain the composition of certain amphiboles.—syn″te-cop′y-ra, n. Hectic fever attended with emaciation. syn-tec″ty-cop′y-ra‡.—syn-tec′tic, a. Consumptive; wasting. syn-tec′tic-al‡.—syn″te-re′sis, n. Med. Prophylactic or preventive treatment while in health; hygiene.—syn″te-ret′ic, a. Relating to prophylactic or preventive treatment against disease.—syn″te-ret′ics, n. The doctrine and treatment for prevention of disease; hygiene.—syn-tex′is, n. A decline of bodily tone; a wasting away of the body; consumption.—syn′theme, n. Math. A system of groups comprising every individual of another set taken any given number of times.—syn′the-na, n. A variety of epilepsy attended by burning pain of the stomach and griping of the bowels.—syn-ther′mal, a. Having the same temperature.—syn′thro-nus, n. Gr. Ch. An arrangement of seats behind the altar, together with and surmounted by the throne of the bishop.—syn′to-my, n. [Rare.] Brevity; conciseness. syn-to′mi-a‡.—syn″to-no-lyd′i-an, a. Same as HYPOLYDIAN. See MODE, 8.—Syn-trem′a-ta, n. pl. Conch. A section of geophilous pulmonates with the genital orifices confounded or contiguous, including Helicidæ, Limacidæ, and most others.—syn-trem′a-tous, a.—syn-trip′sis, n. Surg. The comminution or crushing of a bone into fragments. syn-trim′ma‡.—syn′tro-phus, n. A hereditary ailment; disease which has grown up with a person.—syn′tro-phy, n. Agreement, as in combination, coincidence, or coördination.—syn-trop′ic, a. Anat. Turning or pointing in the same direction so as to form a series of similar parts, as the vertebræ.—syn-typ′ic, a. Of or pertaining to the same type. syn-ty′pous‡.—syn-typ′i-cism, n. The character or state of being syntypic.—Syn-zi″pho-su′ra, n. pl. Crust. A Silurian suborder of merostomes having the head a solid plate with a median lobe, mostly free abdominal segments, and a telson.—syn-zi″pho-su′ran, a. &

syn-æ're-sis, n. Same as SYNERESIS.

syn'a-gog, n. Synagogue. PHIL. SOC.

syn'a-gogue, sin'a-gog, n. 1. A building or place of meeting for Jewish worship and religious instruction. 2. A Jewish congregation or assemblage for religious instruction and observances, usually conducting services according to a prescribed ritual, and having an organization similar to a Christian church; hence, a meeting or congregation of early Jewish Christians. 3. [S-] A traditional Jewish council, composed of probably 120 members, established after the Babylonian captivity. Great Synagogue‡.

The Great Synagogue plays a considerable part in Jewish tradition: it is represented as a permanent council, under the presidency of Ezra, wielding supreme authority over the Jewish nation; . . . we now know that the whole idea . . . is pure fiction. W. R. SMITH Old Testament in Jewish Church lect. vi, p. 156. [BL. '81.]

4. [Rare.] Any assemblage of men. [F., < LL. synagoga, < Gr. synagōgē, < syn, together, + agō, lead.]

—syn"a-gog'ic-al, a. Of or pertaining to a synagogue. syn'a-gog-al‡.—syn'a-gogu-ish, a. [Rare.] Inordinately zealous for the synagogue; fanatical.

syn"a-le'pha, sin"a-li'fa, n. Gram. The union or blending into a single syllable of two successive vowels of different syllables; especially, the suppression of a final vowel or diphthong before one at the beginning of the following word; as, th' Omnipotent for the Omnipotent. [< L. synalephe, < Gr. synaliphē, unite, < syn, together, — aliphō, anoint.] syn"a-le'phe‡; syn"a-lœ'pha‡; syn"a-lœ'phe‡.

syn'a-mur, sin'a-mur, n. Her. A dark reddish-brown tincture. Called also sanguine and murrey.

Syn"an-the're-æ, sin"an-thi're-i or -thē're-ē, n. pl. Bot. A former order of plants now called Compositæ. [< SYN- + ANTHER.] Syn-an'ther-æ‡. -syn-an"ther-ol'o-gy, n. Bot. The study of plants of the order Compositæ (formerly Synantheræ). -syn-an"ther-o-log'ic-al, a. —syn-an"ther-ol'o-gist, n. —syn-an'ther-ous, a. Bot. Having the stamens cohering by their anthers, as in the Compositæ; syngenesious. sym"phyan'ther-ous‡.

syn-an'thous, syn-an'throse, etc. See SYN-.

syn-an'thrin, sin-an'thrin, n. Chem. Same as INULIN. [< SYNANTHERÆ.]

syn"a-phe'a, } sin"a-fi'a or -fē'a, -fai'a, n. Anc. Pros.
syn"a-phei'a, } 1. Continuous flow or connection between one colon and another of a metrical period or system. 2. Such a connection between the last syllable of one verse and the first of the next that the former is made long by position, or cut off by synalepha or ecthlipsis. [< LL. synaphia, < Gr. synapheia, < syn, together, + haptō, unite.]

Syn-ap'ta, sin-ap'ta, n. Echin. 1. A genus typical of Synaptidæ. 2. [s-] [-TÆ, pl.] A transparent holothurian of this or a related genus, as the European Synapta digitata or S. girardi, common on the Atlantic coast of the United States. See illus. under ANCORA.

The Synaptæ move through the mud and collect around themselves the sand tube in which they are encased. ELIZABETH C. AND A. AGASSIZ Seaside Studies, Holothurians p. 95. [T. & F. '65.]

syn'ar-chy, sin'ār-ki, n. [-CHIES, pl.] [Rare.] 1. A government administered by two or more persons ruling jointly, such as father and son. 2. A participation by the people in the government.

Hamarchy, then, signifies something entirely different from the ancient synarchy, which merely denoted a government in which the people had a share together with the rulers proper.

F. LIEBER Political Ethics vol. i, bk. ii, ch. 12, p. 354. [L. '75.]

syn"ar-thro'di-al, Syn"as-cid'i-æ, etc. See SYN-.

syn"ar-thro'sis, sin'ār thrō'sis, n. [-SES, -sēz, or -sēs, pl.] 1. Anat. A joint that permits no motion between the parts articulated. 2. Echin. A close suture in a crinoid calyx. [< Gr. synarthrōsis, < syn, together, + arthrōn, socket.]

syn'as-try, sin'as-tri, I. W. Wr. (si-nas'tri, C. E.), n. Astrol. A conjunction of stellar positions, or houses, as exerting similarity of influence over one's fortune.

Born in the same day of the month and hour of the day with the Queen but two years before her birth, the supposed synastry of their destinies might partly account, in that age of astrological superstition, for the influence which he, Earl of Leicester, perpetually exerted. MOTLEY Netherlands vol. i, ch. 7, p. 365. [H. '68.]

syn'carp, sin'cārp, n. Bot. 1. An aggregate fruit composed of several more or less coherent carpels, as in the blackberry, or a multiple fruit, as in the fig. 2. Same as ÆTHALIUM. [< SYN- + Gr. karpos, fruit.] syn-car'pi-um‡ [-PI-A, pl.].

—syn-car'pous, a.—syn'carp-y, n. Bot. The union of the normally free pistils of a flower.

syn-cat"e-gor"e-mat'ic, sin-cat"e-gor'e mat'ic, a. Logic. Pertaining to words that can form only parts of terms, as adverbs, prepositions, and conjunctions: opposed to categorematic.

Words . . . such as adverbs, prepositions, and nouns not in the nominative case, can only form part of a term, and are said to be syncategorematic. MCCOSH Logic pt. i, § 2, p. 7. [C. & BROS. '71.]

A term is transcategorematic when it represents a purely abstract, universal, and transcendental concept; categorematic, when it denotes an existence or an existing being; syncategorematic, when it expresses an attribute or property of an existing being as susceptible of generalization. [< Gr. synkategorēmatikos, < syn, together, + kata-gorēma; see CATEGOREM.]

—syn-cat"e-gor"e-mat'ic, n. A syncategorematic word. —syn-cat"e-gor"e-mat'ic-al-ly, adv.

syn-ceph'a-lus, syn-cer'e-brum, etc. See SYN-.

syn'chro-nal, sin'cro-nal, a. Same as SYNCHRONOUS.

syn'chro-nal, n. One of two or more events happening simultaneously.

syn'chrone, sin'crōn, n. Math. The locus of points attained at any given moment by particles sliding from a fixed point along a family of curves. [< Gr. synchronos, contemporaneous, < syn, together, + chronos, time.]

syn"chro-ne'i-ty, sin'cro-nē'i-ti, n. Synchronism; specifically (Geol.), supposed coincidence in the time of formation: said of strata.

syn-chron'ic, sin-cron'ic, a. Of or pertaining to synchronism; synchronous: specifically noting any system, as in telegraphy, having for its object the duplication at separated stations of definite mechanical movements.

syn'chro-nism, sin'cro-nizm, n. 1. The state of being synchronous; coincidence in time of different events or phenomena; simultaneousness.

We are driven to aid our recollection by arbitrary synchronisms. E. A. FREEMAN Historical Essays second series, essay i, p. 5. [MACM. '80.]

2. A tabular grouping of historic personages or events according to their dates. 3. In art, representation in the same picture of events having differing dates. [< F. synchronisme, < Gr. synchronismos, < synchronos; see SYNCHRONE.]

syn"chro-nis'tic, sin"cro-nis'tic, a. Characterized by synchronism; occurring synchronously. syn"chro-nis'tic-al‡.—syn"chro-nis'tic-al-ly, adv.

syn"chro-ni-za'tion, sin'cro-ni-zē'shun, n. 1. The act of synchronizing, or the state of being synchronized; a bringing into coincidence in time; a keeping time; as, the synchronization of events or of chronometers. 2. The state of being synchronous; simultaneous occurrence of different events; synchronism. syn"chro-ni-sa'tion‡.

syn'chro-nize, sin'cro-naiz, v. [-NIZED; -NI'ZING.] I. t. 1. To make coincident in time or contemporaneous; assign the same date to.

He has synchronized heroes who flourished in two distant periods. LADY SYDNEY MORGAN Wild Irish Girl vol. i, letter xi, p. 184. [P. M. H. '67.]

2. To make agree in keeping time; regulate (as a clock) by means of a synchronizer.

II. i. To concur in point of time; coincide as to date. [< Gr. synchronizō, < synchronos; see SYNCHRONE.]

syn'chro-nise‡.

syn'chro-ni"zer, sin'cro-nai"zer, n. 1. One who or that which synchronizes; as, a synchronizer of history or of machines. 2. Specifically, a mechanism for making clocks keep the same time.

An Electric Clock-synchronizer.

When, by the true time, the second hand should point, say to 60, an electric impulse may be sent to the electromagnet m, causing it to attract the armature a, and pulling the cord ac which sets the hand to its proper place.

syn'chro-ni"ser‡.

syn"chro-nol'o-gy, sin'cro-nol'o-ji, n. Comparative chronology; systematic arrangement of contemporaneous events in order of their dates. [< Gr. synchronos (see SYNCHRONE) + -LOGY.]

syn'chro-nous, sin'cro-nus, a. 1. Occurring at the same time; coincident; simultaneous, as events. 2. Having all corresponding parts in the same time: happening at the same rate; as, synchronous oscillations. [< L. synchronus, < Gr. synchronos; see SYNCHRONE.] —synchronous curve, same as SYNCHRONE.

—syn'chro-nous-ly, adv.—syn'chro-nous-ness, n. The state or character of being synchronous.

syn'chro-ny, sin'cro-ni, n. [Rare.] Same as SYNCHRONISM.

Syn-chyt'ri-um, sin-kit'ri-um, n. Bot. A genus of organisms commonly included with chytridiaceous fungi, but relegated by some authors to the animal kingdom. The swarm-spore changes into a plasmodium within the host-cell; this becomes invested with a thick wall and changes into a resting sporangium or becomes a mother-cell within which swarm-sporangia are produced. All are parasitic in the cells of living plants, and many form small epidermal warts or galls. [< SYN- + Gr. chytrion, dim. of chytra, pot.]

syn-clas'tic, sin-clas'tic, a. Math. Having the same kind of curvature in all directions; concave or convex in every direction: said of a surface, and opposed to anticlastic. [< SYN- + Gr. klastos, broken, < klaō, break.]

syn-cli'nal, sin-clī'nal, C.[1] E. I. S. W.[1] Wr. (sin'cli-nal, C.[2] W.[2]), a. Sloping downward on each side toward a common line or point; specifically, in geology, dipping downward on each side toward the axis of the fold: said of strata: opposed to anticlinal.

In folded strata, the layers bend upward and downward successively; the upward is an anticlinal flexure, . . . and the downward a synclinal. DANA Geology pt. ii, ch. 2, p. 95. [I. & CO. '80.]

syn-cli'nal-ly‡.—synclinal axis, the line or plane at which the slopes of a synclinal fold meet, or its line of direction; also, rarely, a synclinal fold. Compare ANTICLINAL. —s. line, the synclinal axis. —s. mountain, a mountain whose strata dip from opposite sides toward its center. —s. valley, a valley lying in a synclinal flexure.

syn-cli'nal, n. A synclinal flexure, or a synclinal axis: a topographic feature of synclinal structure.

syn'cline, sin'cloin, C. (sin-cloin', W.), n. Geol. Same as SYNCLINAL: now used preferably as the noun.

Where strata . . . dip towards an axis, forming a trough or basin, it is called a Syncline, or synclinal axis. ARCH. GEIKIE Text-Book Geology bk. iv, pt. iv, p. 517. [MACM. '82.]

syn"cli-no'ri-um, sin"cli-nō'ri-um, n. Geol. A mountainous district supposed to have existed originally as a geosynclinal, the down-curved beds of which were afterward folded into one or more ridges, the general surface of the area being more or less upraised during or after the process of folding. [< SYNCLINE.] syn'cli-nore‡.

syn-cli'tic, etc. See SYN-.

syn'co-pal, sin'co-pal, a. Of or pertaining to syncope. syn-cop'ic‡; syn-cop'tic‡.

syn'co-pal, n. Pathol. An intermittent fever characterized by persistent attacks of fainting.

syn'co-pate, sin'co-pēt, vt. [-PA'TED; -PA'TING.] 1. Gram. To contract (a word) by omitting a letter or letters from the middle; affect by syncope.

Observe here the short final vowel, the tense not being an imperfect, . . . but a syncopated aorist. ANTHON Homer's Iliad bk. v, l. 376-381, note.

2. Mus. To begin, as a tone, on an unaccented part of a measure and end on an accented part. See SYNCOPATION. [< LL. syncopo (pp. syncopatus), faint away, < L. syncope; see SYNCOPE.]

syn"co-pa'tion, sin"co-pē'shun, n. The act of syncopating, the state of being syncopated, or that which is syncopated. (1) Mus. The beginning of a tone on an unaccented beat and its continuation through the following accented beat, or the beginning of a tone on the last half of a beat and continuing it through the first half of the next beat; also, the tone so treated, generally receiving an accent. A syncopation may also be indicated by a slur or by a sforzando-mark, causing accent on an unaccented beat of the measure. The object of syncopation being conflict or variance with the regular accent of the measure, the mind must hold firmly the regular beats, accented and unaccented, during the performance of a syncopation, or its effect will be lost. (2) Gram. The affecting of a word by syncope; syncope.

syn'co-pe, sin'co-pe, n. 1. Gram. The elision of a vowel or syllable from the midst of a word, as in arbalist from Latin arcubalista, ne'er for never. 2. Anc. Pros. The omission of an arsis in the middle of a verse, the time being made up by prolonging the preceding long thesis. 3. Mus. (1) Same as SYNCOPATION. (2) The correspondence of two or more tones in one voice-part with a single tone in another. 4. Pathol. Sudden faintness; a fainting-fit; swooning, with loss of sensation, motion, and consciousness.

The radical fault characteristic of writers of sensational fiction, a too promiscuous 'clearing the ground' by syncope and suicide. W. SHARP Robert Browning ch. 4, p. 89. [W. S. '90.]

5. [Rare.] A sudden and involuntary delay; temporary cessation or interruption. [L., < Gr. synkopē, < syn, together, + koptō, cut.]

syn'co-pism, sin'co-pizm, n. A name having some of its intermediate letters represented by periods or asterisks, as J . . n J . . k . . s for John Jenkins: a form of pseudonym.

syn'co-pize, sin'co-paiz, vt. [-PIZED; -PI'ZING.] To syncopate, especially in grammar.— syn'co-pist, n.

Syn-cor'y-ne, Syn"co-ryn'i-dæ, etc. See SYN-.

syn'cra-tism, n. Same as SYNCRETISM.

syn-cret'ic, sin-cret'ic (XIN), a. Of or relating to syncretism; blending or uniting different speculative systems, as of religion, philosophy, etc.

Influence of Heathenism upon Judaism . . . reached its greatest strength in Egypt, the special centre and source of the syncretic tendencies of the age. KURTZ Church History tr. by Macpherson, vol. i, § 10, p. 36. [H. & S. '91.]

syn-cret'ic, n. A syncretist.

syn'cre-tism, sin'cre-tizm, n. 1. A tendency or effort to reconcile and unite various systems of philosophy or religious opinion on the basis of tenets common to all and against a common opponent; also, derogatorily, the spirit or practise of indifferentism or of false or undue toleration: distinguished from eclecticism.

Eclecticism, in Cousin's sense, is not a mere syncretism; it contains a definite philosophical method, and would develop truth even were there no other systems to compare with it.

J. D. MORELL Hist. Modern Philos. ch. 8, p. 669. [C. & BROS. '72.]

2. Ch. Hist. Specifically, a movement in the 17th century proposing to bring the Protestant sects into nearer accord with one another, especially to bring the Lutheran and Reformed churches into a union: advocated by George Calixtus and opposed by Abraham Calovius; later, in the Lutheran Church, the principle of moderation and development, as opposed to strict orthodoxy.

Another tendency strongly manifest was towards what is called syncretism, or a mingling of different religious systems. It was hoped that the truth might be found by combining beliefs drawn from many different quarters. G. P. FISHER Universal History pt. i, div. ii, period v, ch. 3, p. 185. [I. B. & CO.]

[< Gr. synkrētismos, < synkrētizō, unite against.]

—syn'cre-tist‡.—syn"cre-tis'tic, a. Of or pertaining to syncretism or syncretists.

syn'cre-tize, sin'cre-tiz, vt. [-TIZED; -TI'ZING.] To attempt to blend and reconcile, as various religions or philosophies; unite and harmonize, as heterogeneous sects or parties. [< Gr. synkrētizō, unite against.] syn'cre-tise‡.

syn'cri-sis, sin'cri-sis, n. Rhet. A comparison of opposite persons or things. [LL., < Gr. synkrisis, < syn, together, + krinō, judge.]

syn-cyt'i-um, sin-sit'i-um or -kit'i-um, n. [-I-A, pl.] Biol. A mass of protoplasm with several nuclei, but not consisting of separate cells, as the ectoderm of sponges, striped muscle-fiber, etc. [< SYN- + Gr. kytos, hollow, < kyō, hold.]

The germinal cells may form the lining of a sack or tube, having the form of a syncytium or of an epithelium of separate cells. F. M. BALFOUR Comp. Embryol. vol. i, ch. 1, p. 18. [MACM. '85.]

syn-dac'tyl, sin-dac'til, a. 1. Teral. Having the digits of either hand or foot united. 2. Syndactylous, as a bird. [< SYN- + Gr. daktylos, finger.] —syn-dac'tyl, n. 1. That which is syndactyl or syndactylous. 2. One of the Syndactyli. syn-dac'tyle‡.

—Syn-dac'ty-læ, n. pl. Ornith. A cohort of anisodactylous birds with syndactylous feet, as hornbills, kingfishers, etc.— Syn-dac'ty-li, n. pl. Ornith. 1. A division of insessorial birds with syndactylous feet, variously limited, including hornbills, kingfishers, etc. 2. The Steganopodes.— syn-dac'tyl-ism, n. The condition of being syndactyl or syndactylous. syn"-dac-tyl'i-a‡.—syn-dac'tyl-ous, a. 1. Having the toes closely united by integuments for all or a part of their length, as in the foot of kingfishers. 2. Steganopodous. 3. Of or pertaining to the Syndactylæ or Syndactyli. syn"dac-tyl'ic‡.—syn-dac'tyl-us, n. [-TYL-I, pl.] A monster with congenital union of either fingers or toes.

Syndactyl Structure.

Bones of the right hind foot of a kangaroo (Macropus).

syn-dec'to-my, sin-dec'to-mi, n. Surg. An incision of the conjunctiva around the cornea for diminishing the flow of blood to it when it is inflamed, with or without removal of a strip of conjunctiva. [< synd- in SYNDESMO- + Gr. ektomē, cutting out, < ek, out; and see -TOMY.] circumcision of the cornea‡.

syn-den'dri-um, sin-den'dri-um, n. Zoöph. The quadrate disk suspended from the umbrella by the dendrostyles in rhizostomous hydrozoans.

In the Rhizostomidæ a complex tree-like mass . . . is suspended from the middle of the umbrella in a very singular way. The main trunks of the dependent polypiferous tree . . . unite above into a thick, flat, quadrate disc, the syndendrium, which is suspended by four stout pillars, the dendrostyles, one springing from each angle. HUXLEY Oceanic Hydrozoa § 1, p. 18. [R. SOC. '59.]

syndesmo-, syndesmo-. ⟨ Derived from Greek syndesmos, band (< syn, together, + deō, bind); combining forms.—syn-desm"ec-to'pi-a, n. Abnormal position or displacement of a ligament.—syn-des"mi-ol'o-gy, n. Same as SYNDESMOLOGY.—syn"des-mi'tis, n. Inflammation of the ligaments of the joints.—syn-des"mo-don'toid, n. Anat. Of or pertaining to the ligament and odontoid process of the axis.—syn"des-mog'ra-phy, n. A scientific description of the ligaments.—syn"des-mol'o-gy, n. The part of anatomy that treats of the ligaments. des-mol'o-gy‡; syn-des"mi-ol'o-gy‡.—syn-des"mo-path-i'a, n. Any disease of the ligaments.—syn-des"mo-phar"yn-ge'us, n. A muscular slip frequent in man, passing from the lateral thyrohyoid ligament to the middle constrictor of the pharynx.—syn"des-mo'sis, n. The joining of two portions of the skeleton by means of ligamentous tissue; synneurosis. See illus. under JOINT.—syn"des-mot'ic, a.—syn"des-mot'o-my, n. The art of dissecting the ligaments; the anatomy of ligaments.

syn-det'ic, syn'dro-me, etc. See SYN-.

syn'dic, sin'dic, n. A civil magistrate or officer representing a government or a community, having different powers in different countries; also, one chosen to transact business for others: used also collectively for a body of officers or a council. Specifically: (1) A manager of the affairs of a university, company, or corporation.

The syndics of Cambridge were desirous that Mr. Clowes should go down there to set their printing-office in order.
SMILES Men of Invention ch. 8, p. 213. [H. '85.]

(2) An officer of the Swiss executive council. (3) F. Law. An assignee in bankruptcy. (4) In Italy, the chief magistrate of a commune.

syn'di-cate[1], sin'di-kêt, v. [-CA'TED; -CA'TING.] I. t. 1. To combine into a syndicate. 2. To effect or manage by a syndicate; as, to syndicate a novel. See SYNDICATE, n., 2.

II. i. To unite to form a syndicate.

—syn"di-ca'tion, n. The act or procedure of forming a syndicate.—syn'di-ca"tor, n. One who effects sales or purchases for or by means of a syndicate.

syn'di-cate[2]†, vt. To judge; censure.

syn'di-cate, n. 1. Finance. An association of individuals or (rarely) a combination of companies united for the prosecution of some enterprise or scheme requiring large capital; several financiers combined to buy up stocks or certain commercial commodities with a purpose of commanding markets.

These syndicates, pools, trusts, . . . fixed prices and crushed all competition except when combinations as vast as themselves arose.
BELLAMY Looking Backward ch. 5, p. 54. [H. M. & CO. '89.]

2. A combination of persons associated for purchasing manuscripts and selling them again—usually at a low individual rate to a number of periodicals, as newspapers, for simultaneous publication; sometimes used attributively; as, syndicate matter. 3. A university committee appointed for some specific duty. 4. The office or jurisdiction of a syndic; syndics collectively: the original meaning. [< LL. syndicatus, < syndicus, syndic, < Gr. syndikos, syndic, < syn, together, + dikē, law.]

syn"di-dac'tic, sin'dai-dac'tic, a. Following a simultaneous or concerted method of class-instruction.

Instruction in the schools [of modern Greece] is divided into two grades, the lower monitorial ('mutual,') and the higher 'syndidactic,' or 'simultaneous.' P. JOHANNIS in Barnard's Journal of Education vol. xii, p. 577.

[< SYN- + DIDACTIC.]

syn'doc, n. Same as SINTOC.

syn"dy-as'mi-an, sin'di-as'mi-an, C. (-dai-az'-, W.), a. Of or pertaining to (1) union between single pairs without exclusive coition, as in animals during the pairing-season, or (2) a family or social custom that admits of temporary cohabiting for rearing of offspring. [< Gr. syndyasmos, < syn, together, + dyo, two.]—syn"dy-as'mus, n. Sexual coition; cohabitation.

syne, sin, adv. [Scot.] 1. Since; ago. 2. Afterward. 3. In that case.

syn-ec'do-che, sin-ec'do-kî, n. Rhet. That kind of metonymy in which a part is put for a whole or a whole for a part, as an attribute for a subject, an individual for a class, or a material for the thing, as a roof for a house, marble for a statue, a Solomon for a wise man. Compare METONYMY.

The Mohawks were so emphatically the leading member [of the Six Nations] that their name was regularly put by synecdoche for the whole. A. JOHNSTON Connecticut ch. 4, p. 27. [H. M. & CO. '87.]

syn-ech'i-ol'o-gy, sin-ek'i-ol'o-ji, n. Philos. 1. The doctrine of the connection (i) of matter in spatial and other relations, and (2) of things as by causation or with final causes.

The second branch [of metaphysics] is synechology, . . . which is the doctrine of matter, or the phenomena of the real as existing in time, space, and motion.
J. D. MORELL Hist. Modern Philos. ch. 5, p. 485. [C. & BROS. '72.]

2. The doctrine of continuity. See CONTINUITY. [< Gr. synecheia, continuity (< syn, together, + echō, have), + -OLOGY.] sun"[or syn"]ech-ol'o-gy‡.

syn'e-chus, n. Same as SYNOCHUS.

syn'ed-ral, sin'ed-ral (-ī'dral, C. W.), a. Bot. Growing on the angles, as leaves on a stem. [< Gr. synedros, sitting together, < syn, together, + hedra, seat.] syn'ed-rous‡.

syn-e'ma, sin-ī'mə or -ē'mə, n. Bot. The column of combined filaments in a monadelphous androecium, as in the hollyhock. [< SYN- + Gr. nēma, thread, < neō, spin.]

Syn"en-tog'na-thi, etc. See SYN-.

syn'e-py, sin'ə-pi, n. Rhet. The joining together of words in uttering the clauses of a sentence. [< Gr. synepeia, < syn, together, + epos, word.]

syn-er'e-sis, sin-er'ə-sis or -ī'rə-sis, n. Gram. The coalescence of two vowels or syllables, as e'er for ever; opposed to dieresis. [< LL. synæresis, < Gr. synairesis, < syn, together, + hairēō, take.] syn-æ're-sis‡.

Synèresis is the change of a guttural or labial vowel into a coalescent. It is usually regarded as the union of two vowels into a diphthong, which implies an impossibility.
HALDEMAN Analytic Orthography § 172, p. 42. [TR. & CO. '60.]

syn"er-gas'tic, sin"ər-gas'tic, a. Of or pertaining to cooperation; formed by concurrent effort or labor.

Next Noiré and Prof. Max Müller came with their theory, called by Noiré 'the synergastic theory,' which conceives language as the expression of common work.
PAUL CARUS in The Monist Oct., '91, p. 80.

[< SYN- + Gr. ergastikos, working, < ergon, work.]

syn"er-get'ic, sin"ər-jet'ic, a. Working together; cooperative; as, the flexor muscles of the leg are synergetic. [< Gr. synergētikos, < syn, together, + ergon, work.]

syn-er'gi-da, sin-ər'ji-də, n. [-DÆ, pl.] Bot. Either one of the two naked nucleated cells situated at the apex of the embryo-sac and making up with the oosphere the so-called egg-apparatus or rudimentary archegonium.

Strassburger, to whom we owe our more exact knowledge of the processes in the embryo-sac, assumes that it is these synergidæ which first take up the fertilizing substance from the pollen-tube and then pass it over to the oosphere. H. VON SACHS Physiol. of Plants tr. by H. M. Ward, lect. xlii, p. 760. [CL. P. '87.]

syn'er-gism, sin'ər-jizm, n. The cooperation of human effort with divine grace in the salvation of the soul; specifically, a type of Semi-Pelagianism in Germany in the 16th century, which taught that "God does not deal with man as a block, but draws him so that his will cooperates": opposed to monergism. Erasmus and Melanchthon were among its chief supporters.

Synergism is enunciated in the canons of the Council of Trent. . . . Regeneration is explained as taking place by some co-operation of the human will with the divine.
SHEDD Dogmatic Theology vol. ii, pt. iii, ch. 3, p. 503. [S. '89.]

—syn'er-gist (XIII), n. One holding to synergism.—syn"er-gis'tic, a. Pertaining to synergism; hence, in general, cooperating. syn"er-gis'tic-al‡.

The peculiar mental conditions with which the drunkard starts on his career are so overwhelmingly acted upon by alcohol and the synergistic drugs combined with it that his case is almost hopeless from the first. CYRUS EDSON in N. Am. Review Sept., '91, p. 372.

syn'er-gy, sin'ər-ji, n. 1. Combined and correlated force; united action.

The factors of his personality are now a different set of powers, and the product of their synergy cannot therefore be the same.
MARTINEAU Types Eth. Theory vol. i, bk. ii, § 3, p. 467. [MACM.]

2. Specifically, in medicine, correlation or concurrence of action between different organs in health or disease, or between remedies. [< Gr. synergia, < syn, together, + ergon, work.] syn-er'gi-a‡.

syn'es-is, sin'es-is, n. Gram. & Rhet. Construction in accordance with the sense rather than the syntax, as plebs clamant (for plebs clamat). [< Gr. synesis, wisdom, < syn, together, + hiēmi, send.]

syn-es'the'si-a, syn'e-there, etc. See SYN-.

syn'gen-ese, sin'jen-is, n. A plant with stamens united by the anthers. [< SYN- + Gr. genesis; see GENESIS.]

—Syn"ge-ne'si-a, n. pl. Bot. The nineteenth class in the Linnean artificial system of plants, embracing those having the stamens united by their anthers. It included six orders, of which the first four are now included in the Compositæ.—syn"ge-ne'si-an, a.—syn"ge-ne'sious, a. Bot. Cohering into a ring, as the anthers in composite plants; also, having the anthers so cohering, as stamens or flowers.

syn-gen'e-sis, sin-jen'ə-sis, n. Biol. 1. The theory that the embryo is the product of both male and female, or, sometimes, that the germ so formed contains the germs of future generations: in the latter form opposed to epigenesis. 2. Reproduction resulting from the union of ovum and spermatozoon, as in sexual generation. [< SYN- + GENESIS.]

—syn"ge-net'ic, a.

1. Syngenesious Anthers of Lobelia cardinalis. 2. Syngenesious Anthers of Carduus crispus. 3. The same unfolded.

syn-gen'ic, syn'ge-nite, etc. See SYN-.

syn"i-ze'sis, sin'i-zī'sis or -zē'sis, n. 1. Gram. & Anc. Pros. The union in pronunciation of two vowels that can not form a diphthong, so as to pass for one syllable: differing from contraction in not being made in the written word, but only in pronunciation. 2. Pathol. Closure of the pupil, with loss of vision. [L., < Gr. synizēsis, < syn, together, + hizō, place.]

syn'od, sin'əd, n. 1. An ecclesiastical council, stated or special, local or general; hence, any deliberative assembly.

By degrees, it became the practice for the churches of a province to form themselves into an association, . . . Synods, as they were called by the Greeks, or Councils, as they were styled by the Latins.
KEIGHTLEY Roman Empire pt. ii, ch. 7, p. 280. [H. G. & CO. '41.]

As this decision was far from satisfying the churches, a synod of all the clergymen in Massachusetts was held. FISKE Beginnings of New England ch. 6, p. 261. [H. M. & CO. '89.]

2. [S-.] Specifically: (1) One of certain councils distinguished by their extent. See COUNCIL, 4 (1). (2) The supreme ecclesiastical council of the Russian empire, composed of high officials, and known as the Holy Governing Synod. (3) In the Presbyterian churches, a council intermediate between presbyteries and General Assembly, composed of presbyteries or of delegates from them.

In the Presbyterian church, there is a further appeal from the presbytery to the synod and from the synod to the General Assembly. LEONARD WOODS Works, Congregationalism in vol. iii, p. 573. [J. P. J. '51.]

(4) In the (Dutch) Reformed, the German Reformed, and the Lutheran churches in the United States, a supreme council, known as General Synod, and also a more limited one, known as Particular or District Synod. 3†. Astron. A conjunction. [< F. synode, < L. synodus; see SYNODAL.]

syn'od-al, sin'əd-əl, a. Of or pertaining to a synod; synodical. [< L. synodalis, < synodus, synod, < Gr. synodos, synod, < syn, together, + hodos, way.]

syn'od-al, n. 1. A collect of ordinances or constitutions made in provincial or diocesan synods. 2†. In England, a money contribution from the clergy to their bishop at his Easter visitations.

syn-o'di-an†, n. A member of a synod.

syn-od'ic-al, syn-od'ic, sin-ed'ic-al, -ed'ic. a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of a synod; transacted in a synod. 2. Astron. Pertaining to the conjunction of two heavenly bodies one of which revolves round the other, or to the interval between two successive conjunctions; as, a synodical period.

The synodical month, called a lunation, is the time contained between the Moon's parting with the Sun at a conjunction, and returning to him again.
JAMES FERGUSSON Astronomy vol. i, § 378, p. 316. [ST. & S. '21.]

—synodical conference, a general organization of Lutherans united on a strict confessional basis; specifically, a body of German Lutherans, formed by the union of the Missouri, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Michigan synods.—s. revolution, the motion which brings a planet or satellite from one conjunction with its center of motion to another; especially, in the case of Mercury and Venus, the motion between two successive inferior conjunctions with the sun, and, in the case of satellites, the motion between two successive passages between their primary and the sun.

syn'od-ist, sin'əd-ist, n. An adherent or an advocate of a synod.

Syn"o-don'ti-dæ, syn'o-mo-sy, etc. See SYN-.

syn'ods-man†, n. [Eng.] 1. A churchwarden's assistant. 2. An overseer of weights and measures; a questman. syn'od-man"†.

syn-œ"ce-o'sis, sin-ī"sə-ō'sis or -oi"ke-ō'sis, n. Rhet. The union in a sentence of statements seemingly contradictory. [< Gr. synoikeiōsis, binding together, < syn, together, + oikos, house.]

syn-œ'cious, sin-ī'shius, C. (-shus, W.), a. Bot. Having male and female organs, either stamens and pistils or antheridia and archegonia, in the same inflorescence or receptacle, as in most Compositæ and many mosses. [< Gr. synoikia, a living together, < synoikos, living together, < syn, together, + oikos, house.] syn-e'cious.

syn-ol'ki-a, ⟨ sin-oi'ki-ə, -ī'ahi-ə or -oi'ci-ə, n. pl. Gr.
syn-œ'ci-a, ⟩ Antiq. The eve of the Athenian festival of the Panathenæa. [< Gr. synoikia; see SYNŒCIOUS.]

syn"œ-ce'si-a‡.

syn'o-nym, sin'o-nim, n. 1. A word having the same or almost the same meaning as some other; oftener, one of a number of words that have one or more meanings in common, but that differ either in the range of application of those meanings or in having other senses not held in common: opposed to antonym. Compare HETERONYM; HOMONYM; PARONYM. Compare also synonyms for SYNONYMOUS. Words of this class may often be used interchangeably, but discrimination in their choice is one of the most important characteristics of a good writer.

If synonyms be used to mean words of similar meaning, then they have an existence: but if they mean words of precisely the same meaning, then synonyms rarely or never occur. ABBOTT AND SEELEY Eng. Lessons for Eng. People § 7, p. 7. [R. BROS. '72.]

Synonyms are . . . words of like significance in the main; with a large extent of ground which they occupy in common, but also with something of their own, private and peculiar, which they do not share with one another.
TRENCH On the Study of Words lect. vi, p. 248. [K. P. & CO. '88.]

2. The equivalent of a word in another language; as, the German "haus" is the synonym of English "house." 3. Nat. Hist. A scientific name, as of a genus or species, superseded or discarded, as by the law of priority. 4. Loosely, a thing resembling or involving another; as, a country curacy is a synonym of starvation. [< F. synonyme, < L. synonymum, < Gr. synōnymon, neut. of synōnymos; see SYNONYMOUS.] syn-on'y-ma†, pl.; syn'o-nyme‡.

—syn-on'y-mal†, a.—syn-on'y-mal-ly†, adv.—syn"o-nym'ic, a. 1. Synonymous. 2. Pertaining to synonymy. syn"o-ny-mat'ic‡; syn"o-nym'ic-al‡.—syn"o-nym'i-con, n. A book of synonyms.—syn-on'y-mist, n. A collector and expounder of synonyms.

syn"o-nym'ics, sin'o-nim'ics, n. Same as SYNONYMY.

syn"o-nym'i-ty, sin'o-nim'i-ti, n. The state of being synonymous.

syn-on'y-mize, sin-en'i-maiz, vt. [-MIZED; -MI'ZING.] To give the synonyms of; express by words of equivalent meaning. syn-on'y-mise‡.

syn-on'y-mous, sin-en'i-mus, a. 1. Being a synonym of some other word; being synonyms, as two or more words; of the nature of a synonym.

The great source of a loose style . . . is the injudicious use of those words termed synonymous.
BLAIR Rhetoric lect. x, p. 108. [H. & Z. '54.]

2. Having a close relation to each other, as things; also, in a loose or extended sense, of the same purport, as statements or propositions.

To say that we are morally developed is synonymous with saying that we have reaped what some one has suffered for us.
H. W. BEECHER Royal Truths p. 294. [T. & F. '66.]

3. Having by merely a rhetorical attribution the same sense as some other word; as, the name of Washington is synonymous with patriotism. 4. Synonymic. [< Gr. synōnymos, < syn, together, + onyma, name.]

Synonyms: alike, correspondent, corresponding, equivalent, identical, interchangeable, like, same, similar, synonymic. In the strictest sense, synonymous words scarcely exist; rarely, if ever, are any two words in any language equivalent or identical in meaning; where a difference in meaning can not easily be shown, a difference in usage commonly exists, so that the words are not interchangeable. By synonymous words we usually understand words that coincide or nearly coincide in some part of their meaning, and may hence within certain limits be used interchangeably, while outside of those limits they may differ very greatly in meaning and use. It is the office of a work on synonyms to point out these correspondences and differences, that language may have the flexibility that comes from freedom of selection within the common limits, with the perspicuity and precision that result from exact choice of the fittest word to express each shade of meaning outside of the common limits. To consider synonymous words identical is fatal to accuracy; to forget that they are similar, to some extent equivalent, and sometimes interchangeable, is destructive of freedom and variety.

syn-on'y-my, sin-en'i-mi, n. [-MIES, pl.] 1. The quality of being synonymous; sameness or likeness of meaning; the expressing of the same idea by different words. 2. A system of synonyms; the systematic collection and study of synonyms; the use and nice discrimination of synonyms.

The Babel of confusion which tends to overwhelm the domain of zoological synonymy. AGASSIZ in Mrs. Agassiz's Louis Agassiz vol. i, ch. ii, p. 235. [n. y. & co. '86.]

3. A list or collection of synonyms, as in scientific nomenclature. 4. Rhet. Amplification by the use of synonyms. [< F. synonymie, < L. synonymia, < Gr. synônymia, < synônymos; see SYNONYMOUS.]

syn"oph-thal'mi-a, syn-oph'y-ty, etc. See SYN-.

syn-op'sis, sin-op'sis, n. 1. A general view, as of a subject or its treatment; a sketch or outline bringing all the heads of a subject in discourse under one view; an abstract; a syllabus or summary; hence, sometimes, a collection, as in a museum, illustrating systematically in small compass a scientific group or department.

I believe that the foundation and starting point of a vertebrate museum should be a synopsis of the entire branch. B. G. WILDER in Proc. A. A. A. S. vol. xxxiv, p. 270. [pub. by sec. '86.]

2. Gr. Ch. A selection of prayers for lay use. [LL., < Gr. synopsis; see SYNOPTIC.]

Synonyms: see ABRIDGMENT.

syn-op'tic, sin-op'tic, a. 1. Of the nature of a synopsis; arranged for giving a general view; presenting the principal parts in brief or under one view. 2. Containing parts that may be brought under the eye side by side as virtually identical; said of the first three Gospels as distinguished from the fourth. [< Gr. synoptikos, < synopsis, synopsis, < syn-, together, + opsis, view.] syn-op'tic-al‡.—synoptic weather-chart, a chart of any extended portion of the earth's surface on which are delineated the weather-conditions at different points observed at the same moment of actual time. See WEATHER-CHART.

syn-op'tist, sin-op'tist, n. 1. One who presents the main points of a topic in brief space. 2. The writer of any one of the first three Gospels, called synoptic Gospels, from their agreement in narrating nearly the same events in somewhat similar language, and from a common point of view: in distinction from John, who has his own peculiar facts, method, and point of view; also, any one of the Gospels so produced.

synosteo-, synost-. Derived from SYN- + OSTEO-: combining forms. -syn-os"te-og'ra-phy, n. A description of bone-articulations.—syn-os"te-ol'o-gy, n. The branch of anatomy that treats of articulations.—syn-os"te-o'sis, n. Anat. Union of different parts of the skeleton by means of bone, consolidation: a form of synphysis.—syn"os-to'sis‡.—syn-os'te-o-tome, n. Surg. A knife for the separation or dissection of joints.—syn-os"te-ot'o-my, n. The dissection or anatomy of the joints.—syn'os-tosed, a. United by consolidation, as bone to bone.

syn-o'ti-a, syn-o'tus, etc. See SYN-.

syn-o'vi-a, sin-ō'vi-a, n. The albuminous fluid secreted by the synovial membranes in the interior of joints and in other places where lubrication of apposed surfaces is necessary. [< SYN- + L. ovum, egg.]—syn-o"vi-a'lis, n. [-LES, pl.] A synovial membrane.—syn"o-vip'a-rous, a. Producing or secreting synovia.

syn-o'vi-al, sin-ō'vi-al, a. Of, pertaining to, or producing synovia; as, synovial glands.

—synovial folds, fringes, or glands, folds of the synovial membrane projecting into a joint.—s. membrane, the connective tissue lining the interior of a joint-cavity and secreting the synovia.—s. sheath, the investment of synovial membrane formed about a tendon.

—syn-o'vi-al-ly, adv. By means of the synovia.

syn"o-vi'tis, syn-pel'mous, etc. See SYN-.

syn-tac'tic, sin-tac'tic, a. 1. Of or pertaining to syntax; relating to grammatical construction.

Repelled by Meta's too instant and hilarious good-fellowship, which expressed itself in hoarse laughter and in a flow of talk full of topical and syntactical freedom. HOWELLS Hazard of New Fortunes pt. iv, ch. 4, p. 107. [h. '90.]

syn-tac'tics, n. Math. Those parts of mathematics, collectively, that treat of the number of ways of putting things together, as permutations and combinations.

syn-tag'ma, sin-tag'ma, n. [-MA-TA, pl.] 1. An orderly arrangement; regular order.

The Gospel is not a system of theology, nor a syntagma of theoretical propositions and conclusions for the enlargement of speculative knowledge, ethical or metaphysical. COLERIDGE Works, Aids to Reflection in vol. i, p. 234. [h. '56.]

2. A collection of anything, as of writings, music, etc.; as, the Syntagma Musicum of Michael Praetorius. 3. Bot. Any body composed of tagmata. See TAGMA. [< Gr. syntagma, something put together, < syn, together, + tassō, arrange.]

syn'tax, sin'tax, n. 1. Gram. (1) The part of grammar that treats of the sentence and its construction.

Syntax embraces: 1, the doctrine of the joining of words, in the simple sentence, treating of their relations as elements of the sentence and subjects of concord and government. (2) the doctrine of the joining of sentences, in compound and complex sentences, treating of coördination and subordination; and (3) the doctrine of the collocation of words and sentences, in connected speech, treating of their arrangement and relative positions, as required by grammatical connection, euphony, and clearness and energy of expression. See GRAMMAR, SENTENCE, and the Italicized words.

The doctrine of the joining of words and sentences, or Syntax, treats of the laws of speech. MAETZNER Eng. Grammar tr. by Grece, pt. ii, vol. ii, p. 1. [r. bros '74.]

(2) The construction of sentences by combining words in conformity with the rules or laws of any given language. 2. In the Jesuit educational system, the fifth-year class in a seven-year course of classics. 3†. Connected system or order. [< F. syntaxe, < LL. syntaxis, < Gr. syntaxis; see SYNTACTIC.]

syn-tax'is, sin-tax'is, n. 1. Anat. A joint; articulation. 2†. Syntax. [LL.; see SYNTAX.]

syn-tec'tic, syn"te-re'sis, etc. See SYN-.

syn'the-sis, sin'thę-sis, n. 1. The putting of different things together; the combination of separate substances, elements, or subordinate parts into a new form; composition; construction.

To know, involves two comprehensive acts, . . . the act of separation, . . . and the act of uniting or combining the parts into their wholes. These acts are technically termed analysis and synthesis. PORTER Human Intellect § 50, p. 67. [s. '70.]

2. Philol. The combination of radical and formative elements into one word, in the formation of a language, as distinguished from analysis, which keeps them separate words. 3. Logic. (1) Combination of separate elements, as concepts, species, or propositions, into a whole, as of species into genera, or individual propositions into systems; synthetic construction of knowledge. See def. 6. (2) Specifically, and in stricter use, a process of reasoning from the whole to a part, or from the general to the particular: same as DEDUCTIVE or A PRIORI REASONING, and opposed to analysis or induction, each process, however, involving the other as preliminary or consequent. In this sense the word is used also in mathematics, where the chief use of synthesis is in the ordinary form of geometry. See DEDUCTION; INDUCTION. 4. Surg. The operation of reuniting broken or divided parts either of the bones or of soft portions of the body. (1) The union of divided parts remaining adjacent; as, the synthesis of the edges of a wound or the fractured ends of a broken bone. synthesis of continuity‡. (2) The reduction of displaced organs; as, synthesis of hernia, falling womb, etc. synthesis of contiguity‡. 5. Chem. The combination of elements or radicals in such proportions as to form compounds: said specifically of the preparation by artificial means of such compounds as prior to 1828 (when Wöhler prepared urea artificially) were regarded as solely the product of natural processes; as, alizarin and indigo, formerly obtained only from plants, are now made by synthesis from coal-tar. 6. Kantian Philos. The combining of several concepts or propositions into one; a broad generalization that reconciles a thesis with its antithesis.

The concept of connection includes, besides the concept of the manifold and the synthesis of it, the concept of the unity of the manifold also. Connection is the synthetical unity of the manifold. KANT Critique of Pure Reason tr. by Max Müller, vol. i, p. 433.

7. Rom. Antiq. A bright-colored garment worn at meals and sometimes in public during the Saturnalia. [L., < Gr. synthesis, < syn, together, + tithēmi, place.]

—synthesis of sound (Physics), the resultant vibration produced by the simultaneous action of individual notes of different pitches and intensities.

syn'the-sist, sin'thę-sist, n. One who proceeds by synthesis or synthetic methods.

syn'the-size, sin'thę-sīz, vt. [-SIZED; -SI'ZING.] To syn'the-sise, apply synthesis to; unite by synthesis.

And soon this leader, teacher, will stand plain
And build the golden pipes and synthesize
This people-organ for a holy strain.
E. B. BROWNING Casa Guidi Windows pt. i, st. 20.

syn-thet'ic, sin-thet'ic, a. Pertaining to or of the nature of synthesis; characterized by or consisting in synthesis; specifically, tending to reduce particulars to inclusive wholes; as, a synthetic mind or habit: opposed to analytic tendency. [< Gr. synthetikos, < syn, together, + tithēmi, place.] syn-thet'ic-al‡.

The means which method has at command for the constructive or synthetic construction of knowledge are: Definition, Division, and Deduction. UEBERWEG Logic § 141. [l. g. & co. '74.]

—synthetic division (Math.), an abbreviated method of dividing one polynomial by another by using detached coefficients.—s. language, an inflectional language.—s. method, a method of deducting consequences from general principles.—s. philosophy, Spencerism: so called by Spencer as being an attempt to combine all the sciences into a connected whole.

syn-thet'i-cism, sin-thet'i-sizm, n. The observance of or tendency to synthetic methods.

syn"the-tis'mus, sin'thę-tiz'mus, n. Surg. The whole process in setting a broken bone, including extension, counter-extension, coaptation of the fractured ends, and bandaging. [< Gr. synthetismos, < syn, together, + tithēmi, place.]

syn'the-tist, syn'the-tize, n. Same as SYNTHESIST, etc.

syn'thro-nous, syn'to-my, etc. See SYN-.

syn'to-nin, sin'to-nin, n. Chem. The acid albumin ($C_{144}H_{224}N_{36}SO_{43}$) of muscle; muscle-fibrin: formerly called musculin. [< Gr. syntonos, tightly drawn, < syn, together, + teinō, stretch.]—syn'to-nine, a.

syn'to-nous, sin'to-nus, a. Anc. Mus. Having the quality of intensity: especially of an ancient diatonic scale. [< Gr. syntonos; see SYNTONIN.] syn-ton'ic‡.

syn-trac'trix, sin-trac'trix, n. Math. The locus of a point on the tangent to a tractrix, such that the length from this point to the intersection of the tangent with the axis of abscissas is a constant. [< SYN- + TRACTRIX.]

syn-u'si-ast†, n. One who holds the doctrine of transubstantiation (E.)

sy'pher, sai'fer, vt. To make a lap-joint with (two chamfered or beveled plank-edges) so as to leave a flush surface.

syph'i-lis, sif'i-lis, n. Pathol. A specific infectious venereal disease, communicated by direct contact with the virus or due to heredity.

It appears in three stages: (1) primary syphilis, the stage in which the manifestations are limited to the part first inoculated and the adjacent glands; (2) secondary s., in which it manifests itself on the skin and mucous membranes; and (3) tertiary s., in which it spreads its corrosive effects to muscles, bones, and brain.

The virus of small-pox or of syphilis makes its mark on the constitution for the rest of life. MAUDSLEY Body and Mind pt. i, lect. i, p. 19. [macm. '73.]

—hereditary syphilis, constitutional syphilis communicated during fetal life from parental taint.

—syph"il-el-co'sis, n. Syphilitic ulceration.—syph'i-i-lid(e, n. Skin-disease characterized by eruptions resulting from constitutional syphilis.—syph"i-lid'i-a'ter, n. A physician who makes syphilitic disease a specialty.—syph"i-lid-ol'o-gy, n. Same as SYPHILOLOGY.—syph'i-lin(e, n. The specific morbific principle by which syphilis is propagated.—syph"i-li-pho'bi-a, n. A morbid fear and a fancied belief of having symptoms of syphilis.—syph"i-lo-pho'bi-ac, n.—syph"i-lit'ic, a. Relating to, of the nature of, or affected with syphilis.—syph"i-lit'ic-al-ly, adv.—syph"i-li-za'tion, n. The repeated inoculation of the system with the virus of syphilis both as a preventive and as a curative measure.—syph"i-li-sa'tion‡.—syph'i-lize, vt. To inoculate the system of with the virus of syphilis to secure immunity from its effects.—syph'i-lised‡.—syph'i-lized, pa. Affected with syphilis from infection, heredity, or inoculation.—syph"i-lo-der'ma, n. A syphilitic skin-disease or eruption.—syph'i-lo-derm‡.—syph"i-lo-der'ma-tous, a.—syph"i-log'e-ny, n. The origin or generation of syphilis.—syph"i-log'ra-pher, n. A writer on the subject of syphilis.—syph"i-log'ra-phy, n. A written account or description of syphilis.—syph'i-loid, a. Resembling syphilis in either nature or appearance.—syph"i-lo-lep'sis, n. A syphilitic skin-disease in which the cuticle falls off in minute scales.—syph"i-lol'o-gy, n. The science of syphilis, its cognate diseases, and their treatment.—syph"i-lid-ol'o-gy‡.—syph"i-lol'o-gist, syph"i-lid-ol'o-gist, n.—syph"i-lo'ma, n. A tumor due to syphilis; a gumma.—syph"i-lo-ma'ni-a, n. A mental derangement in which the person affected fancies himself the subject of venereal disease.—syph"i-lom'a-tous, a. Relating to or of the nature of a syphilitic tumor.—syph'i-lous, a. Same as SYPHILITIC.

syph'i-ta, sif'i-ta, n. Pathol. Sommambulism.

sy'phon, sy-phon'ic. Same as SIPHON, etc.

Syr'a-cuse, sir'a-kūs, n. A red muscadine wine produced in Italy. [< Syracuse, in Sicily.]

syre†, n. Sire; master.

sy'ren, n. Same as SIREN.

Syr'i-ac, sir'i-ac, a. 1. Syrian. 2. Of or pertaining to Syria or its language.

The Syriac literature extends from the second to the thirteenth century after Christ. SCHAFF Theological Propædeutic pt. i, ch. 68, p. 117. [s. '92.]

Syr'i-ac, n. The language of Syria and of the Semitic populations dwelling between the Tigris and the Mediterranean, being the western dialect of the Aramaic class of Semitic languages. It became nearly extinct under the dominance of the Arabic after the Mohammedan conquest. (See ARAMAIC; SEMITIC.) From the 4th to the 9th century it was largely in use as a literary language, and it contains an important Jewish and Christian literature. (See PESHITO; TALMUD; TARGUM.) Recently it has been revived as a missionary language named the Neo-Syriac.

The ancient Syriac is still the sacred dialect of the feeble bodies of Christians in Asia which represent the Syriac church. W. D. WHITNEY Lang. and Study of Lang. lect. viii, p. 298. [s. '67.]

Syr'i-a-cism, sir'i-a-sizm (XIII), n. An idiomatic peculiarity in the structure or use of the Syriac language.

Syr'i-an, sir'i-an. I. a. Of or pertaining to Syria, ancient or modern; Syriac. II. n. A native of Syria, especially one of the native Aramaic race. See plate of RACES OF MANKIND, at MAN, fig. 11.

Syr'i-an-ism, sir'i-an-izm, n. A Syrian idiom or any peculiarity of the Syrians or of Syriac. Syr'i-asm‡.

Syr'i-arch, sir'i-ārc, n. A high priest or governor of the Roman province of Syria. [< LL. Syriarcha, < Gr. Syriarchēs, < Syria, Syria (< Syros, Syrian), + archō, rule.]

sy-rin'ga, si-riŋ'gu, n. 1. Same as MOCK-ORANGE. 2. [S-.] Bot. A small genus of familiar ornamental shrubs of the olive family (Oleaceæ)—the lilacs—having entire slender-petioled leaves and dense compound pyramidal clusters of fragrant lilac or white flowers. See illus. under LILAC. [< Gr. syrinx (syring-), pipe.]

The Syringa or Mock-orange (Philadelphus coronarius).

syr'inge, sir'inj, v. [SYR'INGED; SYR'IN-GING.] I. t. To spray or inject by the use of a syringe; cleanse or treat with injected fluid.

II. i. To use a syringe.

syr'inge, n. 1. An instrument by which to withdraw a fluid from a reservoir and eject it in one or more jets or streams; a squirt. The simplest forms are valveless single-acting devices, consisting of a piston or plunger working in a tube, and ejecting the fluid through the same orifice as that through which it is received. In others there is a flexible elastic bag supplied with flexible inlet and outlet pipes each having a suitable check-valve.

Syringes are sometimes named (1) from the manner or place of use: as, ear-syringe, eye-s., garden-s. (large, for watering plants, lawns, etc.), hypodermic s. (having a needle-pointed nozle for passing through the skin: see illus. under HYPODERMIC), intrauterine s., urethral s., vaginal s., etc.; (2) from their method of operation; as, condensing-s. (for condensing or compressing air or other gas: called also pneumatic syringe), exhausting-s. (for air or gas), injection-s. (for douches or remedial agents, or for injecting blood into a vein).

2. Anat. Same as SYRINX, 2. 3. Entom. Same as SYRINGIUM. [< Gr. syrinx (syring-), pipe.]

—syr'inge-en"gine, n. A medieval hand-pump, like a very large syringe: used as a fire-extinguisher.—s.-gun, n. A large syringe used for capturing humming-birds by stunning them with ejected water.—s.-valve, n. A disk-valve having an axial stem to cause it to seat squarely.

—sy-rin'ge-al, a. Ornith. Of or pertaining to the syrinx.—syr'inge-ful, n. As much liquid as a syringe will contain.—syr"in-gi'tis, n. Inflammation of the Eustachian tube.

sy-rin'ges, si-rin'jiz, C., or -riŋ'gēs (sir'in-jez, W.). [L.] Plural of SYRINX.

sy-rin'gin, si-rin'jin, n. Chem. A colorless bitter crystalline compound ($C_{17}H_{24}O_9$) contained as a glucoside in the bark of the common lilac; probably same as ligustrin and lilacin. [< SYRINGA.] sy-rin'gine‡.

syr-in'gi-um, si-rin'ji-um or -riŋ'gi-um, n. [-GI-A, pl.] Entom. A tubular organ, usually paired, on certain lepidopterous larvæ, secreting a defensive fluid. [< Gr. syringion, little pipe, < syrinx, pipe.] syr'inge‡.

syringo-. Derived from Greek syrinx (syring-), pipe: a combining form.—sy-rin"go-ce'li-a, n. The cavity found in the center of the spinal cord of the embryo. sy-rin'go-cœle‡. — Sy-rin"go-cœ-lo'ma-ta, n. pl. Spong. A division of protocœlomatic sponges with tubular or sacular diverticula of the archenteron, as syconids.— sy-rin"go-cœ"lo-mat'ic, a. — Sy-rin"go-den'dron, n. A genus of fossils including certain portions of fossil trunks with ribs bearing rows of cicatrices, generally more or less distinctly geminate, supposed to come from near the base of certain species of Sigillaria. — sy-rin"go-my-e'li-a, n. The state or condition of having abnormal cavities in the spinal marrow, due to the breaking down of its substance. — sy-rin"go-my"el-i'tis, n. Inflammation of the spinal marrow, leading to syringomyelia.— sy-rin"go-my'el-o-cele, n. A soft transparent tumor formed by an effusion of serum encysted in the distended membranes of the spinal marrow. — sy-rin"go-my-el'-us, n. A monster characterized by a dilatation of the spinal marrow or formation of a cyst by expansion of its membranes. — sy-rin'go-tome, n. An instrument formerly used in cutting a fistula. — syr"in-got'o-my, n. Operation for cure of fistula by cutting.

syr'inx, sir'inx, n. [SY-RIN'GES, pl.] 1. Ornith. A specially modified structure, usually at the junction of the windpipe and the bronchi (less commonly at the windpipe alone or at the bronchi alone), serving as the song-organ or voice-organ in birds; the lower larynx, as distinguished from the upper, which is incapable of producing sound. In the common form the lower tracheal rings coalesce and form a chamber (the tympanum) and the anterior bronchial rings are movably connected. Internally the syrinx is divided by a bar of bone with a highly vibratile membrane at its upper portion that with elastic folds of mucous membrane is the special agent of song. 2. Anat. The Eustachian tube. 3. [S-] Gr. Myth. An Arcadian nymph, daughter of the river-god Ladon, who was changed by her sisters into a reed out of which the enamored Pan constructed the Pan's pipes. 4. Pan's pipes. See PAN.

Goat-footed Pan, playing on the syrinx, might have been seen in the shadow anywhere. J. M. HOPPIN Early Renaissance, Hellas p. 282. [H. M. & CO. '92.]

5. Archeol. One of the narrow, horizontal rock-cut galleries in the tombs of ancient Egypt. 6. A fistula; also, any fistulous opening. [< Gr. syrinx, pipe.]

syr'ma, sgr'mə, n. Class. Antiq. A long trailing dress anciently worn by stage players. [L., < Gr. syrma, dragging robe, < syrō, drag.]

Syro-. Derived from Greek Syros, Syrian: a combining form. — Sy"ro-A-ra'bi-an, a. Consisting of or including both Syriac and Arabic: sometimes applied to the Semitic family of languages, from its two extreme members. See SEMITIC. — Sy"ro-Chal-da'ic, a. & n. See ARAMAIC, 2. — Sy"ro-phe-ni'cian. I. a. Of or pertaining to Syrophenicia, a Roman province that included the northern portion of the present Palestine and extended east to Palmyra. II. n. A native or inhabitant of Syrophenicia; also, one of mixed Syrian and Phenician blood.

syr'op†, n. Same as SIRUP.

Syr'phi-dæ, sgr'fi-dī or -dē, n. pl. Entom. A family of brachycerous dipterous insects with antennal styles terminal, anal cell long, proboscis soft, and eyes moderate; sun-flies or drone-flies. [< SYRPHUS.] — syr'phi-an, syr'phid, a. & n. — syr'phoid, a.

Syr'phus, sgr'fus, n. 1. A genus typical of Syrphidæ. 2. [s-] A syrphus-fly. [< Gr. syrphos, gnat.]

— syr'phus-fly", n. A fly of Syrphus or a related genus; a syrphid. The larvæ feed upon plant-lice.

Syr"rhap-ti'næ, sir'ap-tai'nī or -tī'nē, n. pl. Ornith. A subfamily of pterocloid birds, including the three-toed sand-grouse. Syr-rhap'tes, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. syrrhaptō, stitch together, < syn, together, + rhaptō, stitch.]

syr'tis, sgr'tis, n. [SYR'TES, sgr'tīz or -tēs, pl.] A quicksand: applied anciently as a proper name to certain portions of the African coast of the Mediterranean where quicksands abound. [L., < Gr. syrtis, < syrō, run down.] sirt‡; syrt‡ [Rare]. — syr'tic, a. [Rare.]

syr'up, syr'up-y. Same as SIRUP, etc.

sy'rus, sai'rus, n. An unidentified Indian bird.

sys†, a. & n. Six. sis†.

sys"sar-co'sis, sis'sar-cō'sis, n. Anat. The union of two parts of the skeleton by means of connecting muscle. [< Gr. syssarkōsis, < syn, together, + sarx, flesh.]

syn"sar-co'sis‡. — sys"sar-co'sic, a.

sys'si-der-ite, n. Mineral. Same as SIDEROLITE. [< Gr. syn, with, + sidēros, iron.]

sys-sit'i-a, sis-sit'i-ə, n. pl. Gr. Antiq. The common meals among the Spartans and Cretans, consisting of black broth, barley bread, wine, cheese, figs, and olives: eaten at the public table, and confined to men and youth. The object of the public meal was to cement social and political ties and to instruct the youth in Dorian discipline, history, and habits.

Aristotle . . . makes the levelling tendency of the Lycurgan legislation consist entirely in the system of sysitia. RAWLINSON Herodotus vol. iii, app. to bk. v, essay i, p. 344, note 3. [J. M. '75.]

[< Gr. syssitia, < syn, together, + sitos, food.]

sys-tal'tic, sis-tal'tic, a. Alternately contracting and dilating; as, the systaltic motion of the heart; pulsatory. Compare PERISTALTIC. [< LL. systalticus, < Gr. systaltikos, < syn, together, + stellō, place.]

sys'ta-sist, n. A political union; federation.

sys-tat'ic, sis-tat'ic, a. Commendatory; as, a systatic letter.

sys-tat'ics, sis-tat'ics, n. pl. Med. Diseases, as a class, that affect the various sensorial faculties at the same time; morbid conditions of mind extending to the muscles or external senses, or vice versa. [< Gr. systatikos, constructive, < syn, together, + histēmi, stand.]

sys'tem, sis'tem, n. 1. Orderly combination or arrangement, as of particulars, parts, or elements, into a whole; especially, such combination according to some rational principle or organic idea giving it unity and completeness; the act, process, or product of construction, scientific, artistic, or practical. Compare CONSTRUCTION; CONSTRUCTIVE.

System is . . . an organized body of truth, or truths arranged under one and the same idea, which idea is as the life or soul which assimilates all those truths.

K.-F. Vocab. Philos. p. 505. [SH. & CO. '78.]

System is the orderly combination of mutually related knowledge into one relatively complete whole. Science is a whole of knowledge in the form of the system. System is meant to represent in its articulation the articulation of the totality of its (natural or mental) objects, according to the 'Law of Totality.'

3. A grouping of facts or objects in such manner that those of the same logical species and genus shall appear together and in order; an orderly classification. classificatory system‡.

Trendelenburg distinguishes 'Systems of Arrangement' (classifications) and 'Systems of Development' (explaining theories). The former take the form of descriptive, the latter of explanatory, natural and mental sciences.

4. Any group or domain of fact and truth regarded as constituting a natural whole and furnishing the basis and material of scientific investigation and construction; as, the solar system. 5. The connection or manner of connection of parts as related to a whole, or the parts collectively so related; a whole as made up of constitutive parts; as, a railroad system. 6. The state or quality of being in order or orderly; orderliness; method; as, an arrangement without system; he works with system. 7. Biol. (1) An assemblage of organic structures composed of similar elements and combined for the same general functions; as, the osseous system; the vascular system. (2) A combination of parts for the performance of some particular function; an apparatus; as, the reproductive system; the digestive system. (3) The entire body, taken as a functional whole; as, the human system. 8. Ascid. One of the stellate, elongated, or branched aggregates of ascidiozooids embedded in the test of a compound ascidian with a common cloaca in the center. 9. Geol. One of the stratigraphic historical subdivisions. (1) In the usage of the U. S. Geological Survey, a subdivision of the first order. (2) In the scheme proposed by the International Geological Congress, a subdivision of the second order. 10. Mus. The braced staffs of scores of concerted music. 11. Anc. Pros. A group of lines composed of anapests, trochees, iambs, glyconics, or dochmiacs, etc., arranged in a certain order. See HYPERMETER; STROPHE. [< LL. systema, < Gr. systēma, < syn, together, + histēmi, stand.]

Synonyms: manner, method, mode, order, regularity, rule. Order in this connection denotes a fact or a result; as, these papers are in order. Method denotes a process; rule, an authoritative requirement or an established course of things; system, not merely a law of action or procedure, but a comprehensive plan; manner refers to the external qualities of actions, and to those often as settled and characteristic; we speak of a system of taxation, a method of collecting taxes, the rules by which assessments are made; or we say, as a rule the payments are heaviest at a certain time of year; a just tax may be made odious by the manner of its collection. Regularity applies to even disposition of objects or uniform recurrence of acts in a series. There may be regularity without order, as in the recurrence of paroxysms of disease or insanity; there may be order without regularity, as in the arrangement of furniture in a room, where the objects are placed at varying distances. Order commonly implies the design of an intelligent agent or the appearance or suggestion of such design; regularity applies to an actual uniform disposition or recurrence with no suggestion of purpose, and as applied to human affairs is less intelligent and more mechanical than order. The most perfect order is often secured with least regularity, as in a fine essay or oration. The same may be said of system. There is a regularity of dividing a treatise into topics, paragraphs, and sentences, that is destructive of true rhetorical system. See BODY; ECONOMY; FRAME; HABIT; HYPOTHESIS. — Antonyms: chaos, confusion, derangement, disarrangement, disorder, irregularity.

— artistic or esthetic system, system in which the underlying idea of construction is beauty rather than truth or utility. — planetary s., see SOLAR SYSTEM. — practical s., a system in which the underlying idea of construction is utility or end to be attained, rather than truth or beauty. — purchase s., the system of purchasing and selling commissions in the British army, prevalent from Queen Anne's reign until 1871, any officer below the rank of colonel having been permitted, on retirement or exchange, to receive a certain sum from his successor for his commission. pur'chase‡. — scientific s., see SYSTEM, 2. — sys'tem-ma"ker, n. A systematist; systematizer. — s.-monger, n. One who is unduly given to forming systems.

— sys"tem-a-tol'o-gy, n. The science of systems or system-making; a treatise on systems.

sys"tem-at'ic, sis'tem-at'ic, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or characterized by system; of the nature of an organized whole from parts combined and adjusted in their proper relation and dependence.

All scientific knowledge is systematic, and takes the form of a complex, but orderly, whole. G. S. MORRIS Kant's Critique of Pure Reason ch. 8, p. 269. [S. C. G. '82.]

2. Acting by system or method; methodical; as, a systematic course or manner of study; systematic thieving. 3. Pertaining to or characteristic of classificatory system; taxonomic. 4. Anc. Pros. Constituting or pertaining to a system. See SYSTEM, 11. [< Gr. systēmatikos, < systēma(t-): see SYSTEM.] sys"tem-at'ic-al‡.

Synonyms: see DOGMATIC.

— systematic anatomy, a description of the body according to the several systems of which it is composed.

— sys"tem-at'ic-al-ly, adv. — sys"tem-a-ti'cian, n. One who adheres to system or to routine.— sys"tem-at'ics, n. The art or principles of classification; systematology.

sys'tem-a-tism, sis'tem-ə-tizm, n. Systematic arrangement; also, excess of or addiction to system. [< Gr. systēma(t-); see SYSTEM.]

— sys'tem-a-tist, n. 1. One who reduces things to system. 2. One who unduly adheres to a system.

sys'tem-a-tize, sis'tem-ə-taiz, vt. [-TIZED; -TI'ZING.] To reduce to a system; arrange systematically; dispose methodically. sys'tem-a-tise‡; sys'tem-ize‡.

The effectiveness of labor is increased by systematizing its operations. WAYLAND AND CHAPIN Elements of Political Economy ch. 6, p. 48. [SH. & CO. '86.]

Synonyms: see REGULATE.

— sys"tem-a-ti-za'tion, n. The act or process of systematizing. sys'tem-a-ti-sa'tion‡; sys"tem-i-za'[or -sa']tion‡.

The immense advantage of scientific culture is that it is a systematisation of the exact and verified experiences of all investigators. LEWES Problems of Life and Mind third series, problem ii, § 64, p. 91. [TR. & CO. '79.]

— sys'tem-a-ti"zer, n. One who systematizes. sys'tem-a-ti'ser‡; sys'tem-i"zer or -ser‡.

sys-tem'ic, sis-tem'ic, a. 1. Of or pertaining to system or a system; systematic. 2. Physiol. Pertaining to the human system; pertaining to the body as a whole; as, the systemic circulation, as distinguished from the special or pulmonic circulation.

In fatal cases [of alcoholic poisoning], the appearances usually resemble, more or less closely, those of Asphyxia; the right side of the heart, the pulmonary arteries, and the systemic veins being loaded with blood. W. B. CARPENTER Alcoholic Liquors ¶ 16, p. 33. [L. BROS. & CO. '50.]

— sys-tem'ic-al-ly, adv. In a systemic manner; with relation to the human system.

sys'tem-less, sis'tem-les, a. 1. Devoid of system. 2. Biol. Being without a distinct exhibition of the systems or specialized tissues and structure characteristic of higher organisms, as the protozoans and the lower algæ.

sys'to-le, sis'to-lī or -lē, n. 1. Physiol. The regular contraction of the heart and arteries that impels the blood outward: opposed to diastole; also, a like movement in protozoans and in parts of other animals.

Thought, like the tides, swings within fixed limits, with ages for systole and diastole, ebb and full, and to know to-day you must be a student of all the past.

GEIKIE Entering on Life, Reading p. 236. [J. P. '89.]

2. Anc. Pros. The shortening of a syllable that is naturally or by position long: opposed to diastole, ectasis. [< Gr. systolē, contraction, < syn, together, + stellō, place.]

— sys-tol'ic, a. Of or pertaining to the systole of the heart; contracting; as, the systolic murmur.

sys'tyle, sis'tail, n. See INTERCOLUMNIATION. [< L. systylos, < Gr. systylos, < syn, together, + stylos, pillar.]

sys'ty-lous, sis'ti-lus, a. Bot. 1. Having the styles united into a single body. 2. In mosses, having the lid permanently fixed to the columella, which elevates it above the capsule when endry. [< Gr. systylos; see SYSTYLE.]

syte†, n. 1. A city. 2. A site.

sythe†, a., prep., & conj. Same as SITH. syth†.

sythe‡, n. Scythe.

sythe[2]†, n. Time; times. sythes†.

syve†, n. A sieve.

sy'ver†, n. Same as SEWER[2].

syz'y-gant, siz'i-gənt, n. Math. A rational integral function of the invariants of a quantic that vanishes when expressed as a function of the coefficients. [< SYZYGY.]

syz"y-get'ic, siz"i-jet'ic, a. Math. Of or pertaining to the expression of a form as a linear function of other forms. [< Gr. syzygos, yoked, < syn, together, + zeugnymi, yoke.]

sy-zyg'i-um, si-zij'i-um or si-zig'i-um, n. Zool. Syzygy; especially, the conjunction of two gregarinideans without fusion of their substances. [< Gr. syzygos; see SYZYGETIC.]

syz'y-gy, siz'i-ji, n. [-GIES, pl.] 1. Astron. One of the pair of opposite points of an orbit where the moving body is in conjunction with or opposition to the sun, especially the points of new and full moon on the moon's orbit. 2. Biol. (1) Echin. An immovable union between two brachials of a crinoid; also, the segment so formed. (2) Zool. Conjunction of two organisms without loss of identity, as in diplozoa. See illus. under DIPLOZOON. 3. Anc. Pros. A dipody or group of two feet. 4. Alg. A function linear in the variables. [< L. syzygia, < Gr. syzygia, < syzygos; see SYZYGETIC.] — line of syzygies, that diameter of an orbit containing the syzygies.

— sy-zyg'i-al, a. syz"y-ge'al‡.

szai-bel'yite, sē-bel'yait, n. Mineral. A white, translucent, hydrous magnesium borate ($H_6Mg_{10}B_{20}O_{25}$) found in small nodules containing acicular crystals. [< Herr Szajbelyi, of Hungary.]

szmik'ite, zmik'ait, n. Mineral. A whitish, hydrous manganese sulfate (H_2MnSO_5) that occurs amorphous. [< Herr Szmik.]

T t — Roman. T t — Black Letter. T t — Script.

T[1], t, tē. n. [TEES, T's, or Ts, tiz, pl.] 1. A letter: the twentieth in the English alphabet; in Bell's "Visible Speech," ʊ: the sign of tongue-tip closure, as in at, or tongue-tip opening, as in to, the vocal cords being open and the nasal veil closed. It is the tongue-tip voiceless stop. It is called a lingual, a dental, a mute, an explosive, a surd. For a more precise description of t and for the general relations of the tongue-tip letters t, d, th, dh, s, z, sh, zh, l, r, see D, S, L, R.

The original Anglo-Saxon t's correspond to Parent Speech, Greek, Latin d's, and to German z's: Gr. L. duo, AS. twā, Ger. zwei, two. The t's of words borrowed from Greek or Latin remain unchanged in modern English, as triple < L. triplex; if there is a corresponding word in original Anglo-Saxon, it will have th, dh, German d: AS. thrī, Ger. drei, three. Modern English sometimes comes from AS. th: noothyrl < AS. noothyrl; sometimes from d by assimilation, as in the past tense of verbs ending in a surd: geurkt < geurked; sometimes from dissimilated gemination of n or s: tyrannos > tyrant, whāsa > whist; often from c = k > tsh written tch or ch: AS. wrecca > wretch, AS. circe > church, L. canto > chant. See C.

Parent Speech, Greek, Latin t corresponds to West-Saxon th > dh > ð: L. ama-t, AS. lufa-th, Eng. love-s. Opening t freely assimilates with t or n, giving rise to ss or tsh = ch: nation = nēshun; nature = nētyur > nētshur = nēchur. In Anglo-Saxon words borrowed from Latin, t unaccented between two sonants changes to d: L. abbatem > AS. abbod-rice, abbot; L. Latinus > AS. Leden, Latin. AS. t now and then corresponds with English d: AS. prūt, proud; and the worthy < seeart, and in a few words t is lost: beat < betat, last < latost. It is silent after s and f, when followed by l, n, m: castle, often, Christmas, and in some words in tch = tsh, lch = lsh in England; bench = bensh, M. S.; belch = beltsh or belsh, M., belsh, S.

In the pronunciation of this dictionary t is used only as above described, except that th is used as the sign of another elementary sound.

Th, th, ith. n. [TH's or ths, iths, pl.] A digraph of the scientific alphabet; in Bell's "Visible Speech," ⨀, Anglo-Saxon Þ Ð, a sign of the imperfect closure of the tongue-tip to the teeth as in myth, or tongue-opening as in thin, the vocal cords being open and the nasal veil closed. If the cords are made close so as to vibrate, the same tongue-movements give the sounds represented in the scientific alphabet by Dh, dh, dhī. Visible Speech ⨀. Anglo-Saxon Ð, Þ, in the common alphabet by th, as in with = with; thine = dhuin. These sounds are fricatives, or spirants, continuous consonants closely akin to s, z. They are first recognized in the Teutonic languages, where they correspond to Parent Speech, Greek, Latin t: Gr. L. tu, Goth. AS. thū, thou, Ger. du; Gr. L. treis, tres, Goth. AS. threis, thrī, three, Ger. drei. Many th's in English are in words borrowed from Greek, which has a single character, θ, called thēta, which is transliterated into Latin by th, and was pronounced as a t followed by an h. There is a Sanskrit letter of similar sound. Thus h became silent in Latin and Romanic, so that th in French sounds as t. But in English, as in modern Greek, these th's took on the sound of the AS. friciative, and the Roman th drove the earlier letters Þ Ð out of use. During this process there was confusion, and many words are found in double forms: apothecary, apotecary; Anthony, Antony. The surd fricative th is recognized only as a change from t + h; it is easily changed by vowel assimilation to dh. The sonant fricative dh has been recognized in no national alphabet, but the sound is six times as frequent in English literature as that of surd th—3.83 per cent. to .58. It occurs in other languages as one of the sounds of d, as in late Greek, Spanish, Danish, and perhaps in Gothic and Anglo-Saxon. The late West Saxon inclines to use Þ at the beginning of words, Ð medial and final; several medial Ð's appear as d's in English, especially with r and l: murder < AS. morðor; afford < AS. geforðian; fiddle < AS. fīðele; and final Ð of verbs regularly changes to s: lufaÐ > loves.

In the pronunciation of this dictionary th is used for the surd spirant, as in thin, breath; dh for the corresponding sonant, as in thine, dhuin, with, widh.

The t sound is the third in frequency in English literature, averaging 5.38 per cent according to the examination by Prof. Whitney. See W. D. Whitney Oriental and Linguistic Studies second series, p. 274, is '74.' It is the second, if the pronunciation of Southern English according to H. Sweet be adopted, dropping final the r's. See R; N; D. It appears in the demonstrative pronouns, personal endings of verbs, and roots of demonstrative meaning throughout the Indo-European tongues.

Capital T is from Latin, Greek Τ Τ < Phenician + < hieratic 𓏤 < hieroglyphic 𓏤. The hieroglyph represents a lasso, the Phenician a cross or mark of ownership (Ezek. ix. 4). The Greek, Phenician name is tau, the Roman te > English ti. The rune is called tīr, glory, and is the seventeenth of the futhorc. T is the last letter of the Phenician alphabet, naturally following s, and the favorite final mute. For black letter, lower case, dates, and the like, see A.

The history of the characters is represented as follows:

Hieroglyphic Lasso. — Egyptian Hieratic. — Phenician. — Early Greek. — Roman. — English Script.

Compare KINETOGRAPH; ZOETROPE. —tach"y-thau'ma-tous, a. Med. Killing quickly; speedily fatal. —ta-chyt'o-my, n. Surg. The art of operating rapidly.

tach'y†, a. Vicious; depraved.

ta-chyg'ra-phy, tȧ-kig'rȧ-fi, n. A system of abbreviated writing; stenography. Compare PHONOGRAPHY; SHORTHAND.

A Tachygraphy or short-hand was also used from a very early period for notes and memoranda.
ISAAC TAYLOR The Alphabet vol. ii, ch. 8, p. 148. [K. P. & CO. '83.]

Specifically: (1) Any of the stenographic systems anciently in use among the Greeks and Romans, and by Christian and other writers up to the 10th century, in which the ordinary alphabet was used with arbitrary contractions and conventional phrase-modifications. The tachygraphic symbols of the Romans were called Tironian notes, after their reputed inventor, Tiro, one of Cicero's freedmen. (2) A system of phonetic shorthand devised in 1869 by David P. Lindsley, of Philadelphia, in which the characteristic outlines of Isaac Pitman's scheme for consonants are employed, with changed values and joined vowels, to form a brief continuous handwriting.

[< TACHY- + -GRAPHY.] —tach'y-graph, n. 1. A tachygraphic manuscript or writing. 2. A pantagraph for drawing an outline of the human figure. —ta-chyg'ra-pher, n. One who writes in shorthand; a stenographer; specifically, one of the shorthand-writers (called also notaries) of the ancient Greeks and Romans. —tach"y-graph'ic, -al, a. Pertaining to or of the nature of tachygraphy; written in shorthand; stenographic.

tach'y-lyte, tak'i-lait, n. Petrol. A pitch-black basaltic glass. [< TACHY- + Gr. lytos, dissolved, va. of lyō, loosen, dissolve: from its being easily fused under the blowpipe.] —tach"y-lyt'ic, a. Composed of, containing, or of the nature of tachylyte.

tac'it, tas'it, a. 1. Existing, inferred, or understood without being openly expressed or stated; implied by silence or silent acquiescence; understood; implied; as, a tacit agreement; a tacit understanding.

There is a general tacit trust in conversation, by which a man is obliged not to report anything out of it, though he is not immediately enjoined secrecy. CHESTERFIELD Letters clxvii, p. 199. [L.]

2. [Rare.] Silent and quiet; emitting no sound; noiseless; as, the tacit deep.

CARLYLE Reminiscences, Edward Irving p. 175. [S. '81.]

—tacit mortgage, a lien in the nature of a mortgage created by operation of law. —t. relocation (Scots Law), the implied renewal of a lease where the landlord permits the tenant to remain in possession without making a new agreement.

—tac'it-ly, adv. —tac'it-ness, n. [Rare.]

tac'i-turn, tas'i-tūrn, a. Habitually silent or reserved; disinclined to conversation; characterized by silence or disinclination to talk; as, a taciturn man.

Macaulay attributes the epithet Silent, attached to the name of William, the founder of the Dutch Commonwealth, to his taciturn habit. G. P. FISHER Supernatural Origin of Christianity essay iv, p. 266. [S. '66.]

Synonyms: close, dumb, mute, reserved, reticent, silent, uncommunicative. Dumb, mute, and silent refer to fact or state; taciturn refers to habit and disposition. The talkative person may be stricken dumb with surprise or terror; the obstinate may remain mute; one may be silent through preoccupation of mind or of set purpose; but the taciturn person is averse to the utterance of thought or feeling and to communication with others, either from natural disposition or for the occasion. One who is silent does not speak at all; one who is taciturn speaks when compelled, but in a grudging way that repels further approach. Reserved suggests more of method and intention than taciturn, applying often to some special time or topic; one who is communicative regarding all else may be reserved about his business. Reserved is thus closely equivalent to uncommunicative, but is a somewhat stronger word, often suggesting pride or haughtiness, as when we say one is reserved toward inferiors. —Antonyms: communicative, free, garrulous, loquacious, talkative, unreserved.

—tac'i-turn"ist, n. [Rare.] A taciturn person. —tac'i-turn"ly, adv. [Rare.]

tac"i-tur'ni-ty, tas'i-tūr'ni-ti, n. 1. The quality or condition of being taciturn; disinclination to talk.

Inseparable from the Indian character . . . is his remarkable taciturnity. CUSTER Life on the Plains ch. 2, p. 16. [S. H. & CO.]

2. Scots Law. Delay in asserting a legal right in such circumstance as to imply satisfaction or abandonment of it.

Synonyms: see RESERVE. Compare TACITURN.

tal'ly[1], n. [TAL'LIES, pl.] 1. A piece of wood on which notches or scores are cut as marks of number.

In all countries and in all ages tallies have been in use for keeping short and simple accounts. The falsification of an account is guarded against by splitting the tally in two through the notches, the debtor taking one half and the creditor the other. In the English Exchequer tallies were used from the Norman kings until 1785 to record the debts of the state, the half of the tally given to the lender being called the stock and the other half retained in the Exchequer the counterstock, each bearing the date of the transaction and the name of the lender. (See STOCK, 28.) Such stocks were negotiable, and when redeemed were fastened to their corresponding counterstock and retained in the Treasury. In 1835 the tallies accumulated in the Exchequer were burned, by order of the government, in the stoves of the House of Lords, a proceeding that caused the destruction of the Houses of Parliament by fire.

2. By extension, a score or mark thus recorded; also, any similar score, as a run in baseball or a mark of debt; hence, a reckoning; account; as, he paid the tally.

But since thy breath gave me both life and shape,
Thou know'st my tallies.
HERBERT The Temple, Affliction st. 2.

tape'work", tēp'wŭrk", n. Ornamental work wrought with tape.

tape'worm", tēp'wŭrm", n. A cestoid worm infesting, when adult, the alimentary canal of a vertebrate.

Tapeworms.

1. The scolex of Echinococcus veterinorum: h, the hooks; s, the cæna. 2. Proglottides of Taenia mediocanellata.

Tapeworms have no mouth or alimentary canal, but live by absorbing the juices of their host. The typical species are ribbon-like, and consist of a knot-like head (scolex), furnished with suckers, hooks, or the like, for adhesion, and a row of segments (proglottides) constricted off from it and progressively increasing in size posteriorly. These may reach several hundred in number and form a band several yards long. Each proglottis develops male and female sexual organs, and the last ones from time to time detach themselves and reach the exterior with the excrement of their host. The fertilized ova are then liberated from the proglottides, enclosed in a capsule, and when swallowed by the temporary or intermediate host burst the capsule and develop into hooked embryos, which bore through the alimentary canal into the tissues or into the blood-vessels, passing from the latter with the blood into the brain, eye, liver, etc. The embryo now surrounds itself with a cyst containing a fluid and becomes a hydatid or bladder-worm, from which is developed the head or scolex, which is incapable of further development until swallowed by the proper host. Taenia mediocanellata, of which the cystic form (Cysticercus bovis) is found in the muscles of the ox, and T. solium, of which the cystic form (C. cellulosæ) is found in the muscles of hogs, are common parasites of man. T. cœnurus, cystic as Cœnurus cerebralis in the brain of sheep, etc., and T. serrata, of whose cysticercus the rabbit is the host, are tapeworms of the dog. The broad or Swiss tapeworm (Bothriocephalus latus) inhabits certain fish, as the burbot and pike, in the embryonic condition.

—tape'worm"-plant", n. Same as CUSSO, 1.

ta'phi-an, tē'fi-ən, n. A tomb-bat. [< Gr. taphos, tomb.]

taph-ren'chy-ma, taf-ren'ki-mə, n. Same as BOTHRENCHYMA. [< Gr. taphros, ditch, + ENCHYMA.]

Taph-ri'na, taf-rī'nə or -rī'nə, n. Bot. A genus of simple ascomycetous fungi, parasitic on higher plants. Many species cause swellings and distortions of the host. The asci are naked and never contain more than 8 ascospores, but these may give rise within the ascus to numerous spore conidia. Taphrina deformans causes peach-curl; T. pruni, plum-bladders. Called also Exoascus. [< Gr. taphros, ditch.]

tap'i-nage", n. The act of hiding or lurking about.

tar²†, vt. To urge; incite; spur. tarre†.

tar¹, n. Chem. A dark-colored viscid oily liquid obtained by the dry distillation of organic bodies and bituminous minerals.

Tar is variously obtained, as in the manufacture of coal-gas (gas-tar or coal-tar; see COAL-TAR), but chiefly from the distillation of pine and other resinous woods, as in the manufacture of methyl alcohol and turpentine (wood-tar). Wood-tar from northern Europe is called Archangel tar or Stockholm tar, according to its source. Mineral tar, such as shale-tar, is derived from various bituminous minerals, as coal, shale, peat, etc. Tar is valuable as the source of the aniline colors; it contains also paraffin, anthracene, etc., yields valuable disinfecting compounds, as carbolic acid and cresol, and is used as a preservative, as of cordage, timber, and iron.

The only effectual method of stopping the progress of these animals [canker-worms], within my knowledge, is to make a swath of tar around every tree, three or four inches broad. This must be repeated at the close of every day. DWIGHT Travels, Journey to Berwick in vol. i, letter iv, p. 76. [T. D. '21.]

taste[1], n. 1. The particular sensation excited when a soluble substance is brought into contact with certain parts of the mouth, particularly of the tongue; also, the quality or property of a body that is thus perceived; flavor; savor; as, a sweet, acid, bitter, or saline taste. 2. That one of the five senses that gives such sensation. See SENSE, n., 2.

> The circumvallate papillæ at the posterior part of the tongue, supplied by the glossopharyngeal nerve, and the papillæ at the sides and tip of the tongue, supplied by the chorda tympani nerve, are the principal seats of the sense of taste, which is dependent on contact of a soluble substance with end-organs (the taste-buds). Sweet and acid substances are thought to be discriminated at the front part of the tongue, and bitter substances at the back. The sense of taste is intimately connected with the sense of smell, and much of the compound sensation produced by eating or drinking an aromatic substance, such as coffee, commonly thought of as simply taste, is due to smell.

tea, tī, v. [Colloq.] I. t. To serve or give tea to. II. i. To drink or take tea.

tea, n. 1. The leaves or leaf-buds of the tea-tree or tea-plant (see def. 3) prepared for use or market. The principal constituents of tea are a volatile oil, theïn, tannin, albuminous compounds, gum, etc., and some soluble mineral matter, containing potash and phosphoric acid.

Most of our teas come from China, Japan, India, Ceylon, and other points in the East Indies. The different kinds and qualities of teas sold in the markets arise, not from different varieties of the plant, but from (1) differences in the age of the leaf and the time of gathering, young leaves or leaf-buds gathered in spring giving the best tea; (2) differences in atmospheric influences during growth or time of harvesting, sunny weather giving the best; (3) differences in soil; (4) differing modes of manipulation before, during, and after roasting, leaves gathered from the same trees at the same time becoming green tea or black tea according to treatment; and (5) assortment and separation or mixture of various sizes and qualities of the leaf, or processes of sifting and winnowing.

The manufacture of tea formerly included as many as 12 operations, but recent methods reduce the number to 5: withering, by light, heat, and air; rolling, by hand or machine; fermenting, in baskets or balls; sunning, done (if at all) by an hour's exposure to a hot sun; and firing, in or over an oven or the like, to dry. The difference between black tea and green tea is the result of manipulation, the latter being withered by steaming, as in a perforated boiler, thus retaining the green color, while leaves simply dried turn black. When not made of the whole leaf teas are often distinguished as ends, fannings, broken leaf, dust, etc. Other conditions are indicated by native names, as hyson (spring), pouchong (wrapped), souchong (small kind), etc. (See list below.) The importation of tea into the United States for the year ending June 30, 1893, was 89,061,287 pounds, valued at $13,857,482. Of this China furnished 45,934,623 pounds and Japan 39,602,519 pounds.

2. A beverage consisting of an infusion or decoction of tea-leaves.

Tea as a beverage is astringent and stimulant, having a decided influence upon the nervous system. Green tea, especially, frequently produces unpleasant nervous and dyspeptic symptoms or unnatural wakefulness. The peculiar flavor and aroma is due to essential or volatile oil, while the physiological properties of tea depend largely upon the theïn it contains.

3. A tea-plant, such as the evergreen Chinese or Japanese shrub or small tree (Camellia theifera or Thea Sinensis) of the camellia or tea family (Ternstroemiaceæ), or the similar C. or T. Assamica, of Assam and India.

Our word tea is derived from the common sound of the character for the plant at the city of Amoy, where it is tay; at Canton and Peking it is cha, at Shanghai dzo, at Fuhchau ta. S. WELLS WILLIAMS Middle Kingdom vol. ii, ch. 15, p. 40. [S. '83.]

The tea-plant grows from 4 to 8, 12, or sometimes 30 feet in height. It has numerous branches, with smooth, elliptical, pointed leaves, somewhat serrated.

A Flowering Branch of Tea (Camellia theifera). a, the fruit.

4. An infusion, decoction, solution, or extract made from some kind of leaves or from some vegetable or animal substance, to be used as a beverage or medicinally; as, camomile tea; ginger tea; beef tea. 5. A particular kind of leaves or the like used for making a beverage, as for medicinal purposes, or the plant which yields the leaves, etc.; as, Paraguay tea. 6. A meal (especially an evening meal) at which tea is or might appropriately be served, usually a meal less substantial and elaborate than a dinner; also, any social gathering at which tea is served.

Lady Harcourt sent her carriage for us to go to her sister's, Mrs. Mildmay's, where we had a pleasant little 'tea.' HOLMES Our Hundred Days ch. 1, p. 41. [H. M. & CO. '83.]

SMILES Duty ch. 1, p. 26. [H.]

[< AS. tǣcan, teach, akin to tācen, token.] teche†.

Synonyms: discipline, drill, educate, enlighten, give instruction, give lessons, indoctrinate, inform, initiate, instruct, nurture, school, train, tutor. To teach is simply to communicate knowledge; to instruct (originally, to build in or into, put in order) is to impart knowledge with special method and completeness; instruct has also an authoritative sense nearly equivalent to command. To educate is to draw out or develop harmoniously the mental powers, and, in the fullest sense, the moral powers as well. To train is to direct to a certain result powers already existing. Train is used in preference to educate when the reference is to the inferior animals or to the physical powers of man; as, to train a horse; to train the hand or eye. To discipline is to bring into habitual and complete subjection to authority. To nurture is to furnish the care and sustenance necessary for physical, mental, and moral growth; nurture is a more tender and homelike word than educate. See DRILL; EDUCATE; INFORM.

teet'sook, tīt'suk, n. [Am. Ind.] In the western United States, a saddle-bag used by Western voyageurs or hunters for carrying valuables.

tee'tuck, tī'tuc, n. [Prov. Eng.] A bird, the rock-pipit.

tee'uck, tī'uc, n. [Prov. Brit. The lapwing. tee"-wheep'‡.

tee'wit, tī'wit, n. [Local, Brit.] A bird, the pewit.

te'fall", tī'fôl', n. Same as TOFALL.

teff, tef, n. [Abys.] An important cereal (Eragrostis Abyssinica) of Abyssinia, the flour from whose seeds is baked into bread.

te-fil'i-n, tę-fil'i-n, n. sing. & pl. A form of phylactery bound about the arm. See PHYLACTERY (1).

The Tefillin.

Inside and outside of left arm, showing method of binding.

teft†, a. Tight; taut.

teg, teg, n. [Prov. Eng.] A sheep in its second year; also, the doe of the fallow deer in her second year. tegg†.

teg'men, teg'men, n. [TEG'MI-NA, pl.] A covering. Specifically: (1) Anat. A triangular plate of the temporal bone that covers over the middle ear. (2) Bot. The innermost coat of a seed, the secundine of the ovule; endopleura. (3) Entom. An elytrum, especially one of the stiff horny fore wings covering the hind wing of an orthopter. (4) pl. Ornith. The tectrices. (5) Echin. The part of the crinoid calyx above the origin of the free arms. [L., < tego, cover.]

teg'u-men†.

—teg'mi-nal, a. Pertaining to or serving as a covering or tegmen; tegumentary.—teg"mi-na'le, n. Echin. One of the regularly arranged plates of the superior or ventral surface of a tesselate crinoid.

teg-men'tal, teg-men'tal, W. (teg'men-tal, C.), a. Of or pertaining to a tegmentum.

teg-men'tum, teg-men'tum, n. [-TA, pl.] 1. Anat. The dorsal part of each crus of the cerebrum behind the substantia nigra. See CRUSTA. 2. Bot. One of the scales of a leaf-bud. [L., covering, < tego, cover.]

te-guex'in, tę-geks'in, n. [Braz.] A South-American teiold lizard (genus Teius), especially T. teguexin, three or four feet long and blackish with yellowish spots. T. rufescens is the red teguexin.

teg'u-la, teg'yu-lą, n. [L.E. -lē or -lē, pl.] 1. Entom. (1) An appendage of the mesothorax covering the base of the fore wings, as in hymenopters. (2) A small scale-like structure anterior to the halter in a dipter. 2. A roof-tile. See TILE. [< L. tegula; see TEGULAR.]

teg'u-lar, teg'yu-lar, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or resembling a tile; composed of tiles. 2. Entom. Of or pertaining to a tegula. [< L. tegula, roof-tile, < tego, cover.]—teg'u-lar-ly, adv. In the manner of tiles.

teg'u-la"ted, teg'yu-lā"ted, a. Consisting of scales or plates overlapping like the tiles of a roof: said especially of a kind of armor sewed on leather or cloth.

teg'u-men, n. [TEG-Ū'MI-NA, pl.] Same as TEGMEN.

teg'u-ment, teg'yu-ment, n. A protecting envelope or membrane, as the skin; a covering; an integument. [OF., < L. tegumentum, < tego, cover.]

teg"u-men'tal, teg'yu-men'tal, a. Investing or integumental; covering; tegminal.

teg"u-men'ta-ry, teg'yu-men'tę-ri, a. Of or pertaining to integument; consisting of skin or other investing structure; tegumental.—tegumentary amputation (Surg.), the skin-flap amputation.

teg"u-men'tum, teg'yu-men'tum, n. [-TA, pl.] Bot. 1. Same as TEGMENTUM. 2†. Same as INDUSIUM.

te-hee', tē-hē', vi. [TE-HEED'; TE-HEE'ING.] To laugh frivolously or with derision; to titter. tee-hee'‡.

te-hee', n. A restrained laugh; titter. [Onomatopœic.]

> Our poor young Prince gets his Opera plaudits changed into mocking tehees. CARLYLE Fr. Rev. vol. i, bk. ii, ch. 5, p. 43. [H.]

te-hoo', tē-hū', n. A sand-partridge; the seesee.

Te'i-an, tī'an. I. a. Of or pertaining to Teos, in Asia Minor, famous as the birthplace of the Greek poet Anacreon (550 B. C.), called the "Teian Bard." II. n. One of the people of Teos. Te'an†.

te'ic, tī'ic, n. An ornament of gold or silver worn above the nose by the women of India.

tei-chop'si-a, tai-cop'si-ą, n. Pathol. A temporary blindness sometimes accompanying severe sick-headache. [< Gr. teichos, wall, + ops, eye.]

Te ig'i-tur, tē ij'i-tūr or tē ig'i-tur. [L.] The prayer or paragraph beginning the canon of the mass in the Roman Catholic and other Latin liturgies; literally, "Thee therefore," from the first two words.

Tei'i-dæ, tī'i-dē or -dē, n. pl. Herp. An American family of lacertoidean lizards with supratemporal fossæ not roofed over and no osteodermal plates. Tei'us, n. (t. g.) [NL., < TEGUEXIN.]

teil, tīl, n. 1. The European lime or linden. 2. The terebinth. Isa. vi, 13. [OF., < L. tilia, lime-tree.] teil'-tree"‡; teyl'-tree"‡.

teind, tīnd, n. [Scot.] 1. Law. A tithe; also, an amount paid to the clergy as commutation of tithes. 2. A spark of fire. [< Ice. tiund, tenth, < tíu, ten.]—court of teinds (Scots Law), a court consisting of five judges with jurisdiction of all matters relating to tithes, stipends, and parish boundaries.—teind'-mus"ter, n. [Scot.] A person entitled to tithes.

tein'-land", n. Same as THANE-LAND. See THANE.

tel'no-scope, tal'no-scōp, n. An instrument consisting of two prisms so combined as to correct dispersion but not deviation, so that objects viewed through it appear stretched out in one direction. Compare AMICI'S TELESCOPE, under TELESCOPE. [< Gr. teinō, extend, + -SCOPE.] prism telescope‡.

teint†, tein'ture†, Same as TAINT, etc.

tek, tek, n. An ibex, the sakeen. ta-kl'ja‡.

tek-non'y-my, tek-non'i-mi, n. The naming of parents after their children: a custom in vogue among many uncivilized peoples. [< Gr. teknon, child (< tiktō, bring forth), + onyma, name.]—tek-non'y-mous, a.

tel, v. & n. Tell. Phil. Soc.

tel-. See TELE-.

te'la, tī'lą or tē'lą, n. [TE'LÆ, tī'lī or tē'lē, pl.] A tissue or web-like membrane; especially, one of the thin membranes (tela choroidea) that cover the third and fourth ventricles of the brain. [L., web, < texo, weave.]

Tela Choroidea.

A horizontal section of the human brain: a, a, tela choroidea or velum interpositum; b, the fornix cut and turned back; c, corpus striatum; d, e, f, the anterior, middle, and posterior horns of the lateral ventricle; g, hippocampus major; h, hippocampus minor. Compare illus. under BRAIN.

tel'a-mon, tel'ą-mon, n. [-MO'NES, -mō'nīz or -nēs, pl.] Arch. A male figure supporting an entablature. See illus. under ATLANTES. [L., < Gr. telamōn, < tlēnai, bear.]

tel-an"gi-ec-ta'si-a, tel-an'ji-ec-tē'si-ą or -ąn'gi-ec-tē'si-ą, n. 1. Pathol. Dilatation of the small arteries or capillaries; aneurism by anastomosis. 2. Maternal birth-marks; wine-spots. [< Gr. telos, the end, + angeion (see ANGIO-) + ektasis, see ECTASIS[2].] tel-an"gi-ec-ta'sis‡; tel-an"gi-ec'-ta-sy†. —tel-an"gi-ec-tat'ic, a.

tel-an"gi-o'sis, tel-an'ji-ō'sis, n. Pathol. Disease of the capillary vessels. [< Gr. telos, end, + ANGIOSIS.] tel-an"gei-o'sis‡.

te'lar, tī'lar or tel'ar, a. Of the nature of or resembling a tela, web, or web-like tissue.—te'lar-ly†, adv.

te-la'ri-an, tę-lē'ri-an. I. a. Web-spinning, as a spider. II. n. A spinning spider.

tel'a-ry, tel'ą-ri, C. W.[2] (tī'lą-ri, E. W.[1] Wr.) (XIII), a. 1. Pertaining to or resembling a web or tela; spun. 2†. Spinning a web. [< LL. telaris, < L. tela; see TELA.]

tel-au'to-gram, tel-ô'to-gram, n. A record made by a telautograph. [< TEL- + AUTO- + Gr. gramma, a writing.]

tel-au'to-graph, tel-ô'to-grąf, n. A writing or copying telegraph, invented by Elisha Gray, for reproducing writing or drawings at a distance by means of a receiving-pen, which, directed by a complex mechanism that is under the control of electric currents, follows the motions of a transmitting-pen operated at the station of the sender. [< TEL- + AUTO- + -GRAPH.]

A Telautograph.

1. The transmitter. An ordinary lead-pencil is used, near the point of which two silk cords are fastened at right angles to each other. These cords connect with the interior electrical mechanism, and, following the motions of the pencil, regulate the current-impulses which control the receiving-pen at the distant station. The writing is done on ordinary paper arranged on a roller. A lever at the left is so moved by the hand as to shift the paper forward mechanically at the transmitter, and electrically at the receiver. 2. The receiver. The receiving-pen is a capillary glass tube placed at the junction of two aluminum arms. This glass pen is supplied with ink which flows from a reservoir through a small rubber tube placed in one of these arms. The electrical impulses, coming over the wire, move the pen of the receiver simultaneously with the movements of the pencil in the hand of the sender. As the pen passes over the paper, an ink tracing is left, which is always a facsimile of the sender's tracings, whether in the formation of letters, words, figures, signs, or sketches.

teld†, imp. & pp. of TELL, v. Told.

tele-, tel-, tel'ę-, C. W.[2], or tĭ'le-, W.[1] Derived from Greek têle, far: combining forms.—tel″e-a-nem′o-graph, n. An instrument that records electrically in one place the velocity of the wind in another.—tel″e-bar′o-graph, n. An instrument that records electrically in one place the height of the barometer or the pressure of the atmosphere in another.—tel″e-ba-rom′e-ter, n. A barometer that exhibits electrically in one place the height of the barometer in another.—tel-eg′o-nous, a. Of, pertaining to, or produced by telegony.—tel-eg′o-ny, n. The alleged influence of a previous sire on the progeny produced by a subsequent one from the same mother.—tel″e-hy″dro-ba-rom′e-ter, n. An instrument for recording electrically at a distance the head, or pressure per unit of area, of water or other liquid contained in a reservoir or in a pipe-system.—tel″e-i-con′o-graph, n. An apparatus consisting of a telescope with a camera lucida attached, by which objects at a distance may be correctly traced from the image thrown by the camera upon a screen or table. tel″i-con′o-graph‡.—tel″e-ki-ne′sis, n. In psychical research, the supposed production of motion in a body without any physical connection between it and the body that causes the motion.—tel″e-ki-net′ic, a.—tel-el′o-graph, n. A signaling device resembling a semaphore, and having four triangular movable pieces attached to a pole for signaling numbers.—tel″e-ma-nom′e-ter, n. A manometer registering at a distance, as by electricity.—tel″e-me″te-or′o-graph, n. A meteorograph recording electrically at a distance.—tel″e-me″te-or″o-graph′ic, a.—tel″e-met′ro-graph, n. An instrument by means of which to draw plans, etc., and measure distances of distant objects.—tel′e-mo″tor, n. A device by which power is applied at a distance, especially in actuating the rudder of a vessel.—tel-en′gi-scope, n. An apparatus combining the functions and powers of the telescope and the microscope: a combination of lenses that may be focused on very near or very distant objects.—tel″e-po-lar′i-scope, n. A telescope having a polariscope attachment.—tel″e-ra′di-o-phone, n. A radiophone used to give signals at a distance.—tel″e-ther′mo-graph, n. A thermograph recording at a distance: a form of telemeter.—tel″e-ther-mom′e-ter, n. A thermometer transmitting its indications to a distance; a telemeter that records temperature. See TELEMETER.—tel″e-ther-mom′e-try, n. The recording at a distance of thermometric indications.

tel′ed-u, tel'ed-ū, C. (-ţ-diū, W.), n. A small burrowing badger (Mydaus meliceps) of the mountains of Java and Sumatra, having anal glands strongly developed and emitting an odor like that of a skunk; stinking badger.

tel′e-fone, tel″e-fon′ic. Telephone, etc. PHIL. SOC.

te-le′ga, tĭ-lē′gą, n. [Rus.] A rude four-wheeled wagon without springs used in Russia.

A Telega.

tel′e-graf, -graft, etc. Telegraph, etc. PHIL. SOC.

tel′e-gram, tel'ę-gram, n. A message or other communication transmitted by telegraph.

Mr. Marsh says, of telegram, that, 'in spite of the objections of some Hellenists against it, as an anomalous formation, the English ear is too familiar with Greek compounds of the same elements, to find this word repugnant to our own principles of etymology.'
FITZEDWARD HALL False Philology p. 46, note. [S. '72.]

Ere a cable went under the hoary Atlantic,
Or the word Telegram drove grammarians frantic.
OWEN MEREDITH Lucile pt. ii, can. 4, st. 5, note.

[< TELE- + Gr. gramma, writing, < graphō, write.]

tel″e-gram′mic, tel'ę-gram'ĭc, a. [Recent.] Pertaining to or of the nature of a telegram; hence, short; concise. tel″e-gram-mat′ic‡.

tel′e-graph, tel'ę-grǫf, v. I. t. To send or convey by telegraph, especially by electric telegraph; transmit to a distance by signals; as, to telegraph a report.

The news was telegraphed all over the United States.
J. B. GOUGH Platform Echoes ch. 24, p. 487. [A. D. W. '86.]

II. i. To send a communication by telegraph; also, to communicate by signals; signal; as, to telegraph to a friend; to telegraph by glances.

tel′e-graph, n. 1. Any apparatus or device for transmitting messages or signals to a distance, especially any form of such apparatus having electricity for the agent of transmission.

Telegraph-instruments.

1. The standard legless Morse key. Pressure on the button (b) makes a contact of the wires at w through the lever l (l), which is normally upheld by the spring (s). If this contact is of short duration a dot is made, if of longer duration a dash. The switch (sw) is swung to the right when opened. 2. Standard sounder. The wires are connected with the receiving-magnet (m), and the dots and dashes from the key at the other end of the line are repeated through the rise and fall of the armature (a), which causes the stop (s) to strike the anvil (an). From resultant clicking sounds the message may be read by ear. If the sounder is connected with a recorder, the message may be impressed on a strip of paper.

Every electric telegraph consists of a battery or dynamo as the source of electricity, an insulated wire, single or compound, joining the two points, the transmitter or key for the signals, and the receiver for the message. The line-wire is commonly borne on poles, but sometimes carried through an underground conduit, especially in city streets. It is usually grounded at both ends, the earth being utilized for the return circuit. The transmitter is usually a key for making and breaking the circuit (as in the Morse system) or for reversing the direction of the current (as in the Wheatstone system), the receiver being generally in the first case an electromagnet that attracts its armature when the current is on, and in the second case a needle that changes its position according to the direction of the current. The message can be sent in a system of arbitrary signals, such as the dots and dashes of the Morse alphabet, printed letters, facsimile writing (see TELAUTOGRAPH, etc., or be recorded on chemically prepared paper discolored by the electricity passing through it. The invention of the electric telegraph has been a subject of much controversy. It was made possible by the labors of Henry in the United States, Wheatstone in England, Ampère in France, Steinheil in Germany, and many others. The first practical working telegraph was constructed by Samuel F. B. Morse of New York in 1832–'35, and his system of transmission, more or less modified, is the one still in most general use.

Millions of citizens learned at their breakfast tables that the President had been shot. . . . This was the first time the telegraph had been called upon to spread over the world tidings of such deep and mournful significance. NICOLAY AND HAY Abraham Lincoln vol. x, ch. 16, p. 314. [C. CO. '90.]

2. A telegraphic despatch or communication; a telegram. [< TELE- + -GRAPH.]

Phrases, etc.:—acoustic telegraph. 1. An electric telegraphic apparatus, as the Morse sounder, designed to be read by the ear alone. 2. A telephone.—automatic t. 1. An electric telegraph designed for sending a message automatically by passing between electric terminals a strip of paper having perforations made through it in conformity with a code or alphabet. At each perforation the terminals touch and an impulse is sent through the conductor. 2. A printing telegraph that conveys and records a message originally written or otherwise recorded upon a strip of paper, as by perforations of various sizes, spacings, and positions. 3. A signal-telegraph giving an alarm or making a signal by a thermostat, or on the opening of a door or turning of a handle. 4. A printing telegraph having a sender with a keyboard like that of a typewriter.—chemical t., or chemical printing t., a telegraphic system in which the messages are recorded on chemically prepared paper by an iron stylus.—copying t., an autographic telegraph reproducing writing, as the telautograph.—dial t., a telegraph in which dials bearing letters and numbers are employed in transmitting and receiving messages. When the pointer of the transmitting dial is made to indicate any letter, that of the receiving dial does the same. disk t.‡.—double-needle t., a telegraph employing two independently operated swinging magnetic needles, each with one wire.—duplex or double-transmission t., a system of telegraphy by which two messages may be sent at once over a single line, as by the use of differentially wound coils.—electrochemical t., same as CHEMICAL TELEGRAPH.—electromagnetic t., the ordinary telegraph, in which the making and breaking of an electric circuit at the sending-instrument actuates an electromagnet at the other end.—facsimile t., a telegraph that reproduces at the receiving end of the line an autographic message or drawings or designs prepared at the transmitting end; a pantelegraph.—fire-alarm t., any telegraphic system for transmitting to a central station signals corresponding to the number of the station from which a fire is reported, usually operated by pulling or turning a handle.—harmonic multiple t., a telegraphic system conveying several separate and distinct musical tones at the same time over a wire, these separate tones being used for sending an equal number of simultaneous telegraphic messages. The tones are thrown into the lines by tuning-forks vibrated by electromagnets, which interrupt battery circuits connected with the main line at the sending end. There is thus formed a composite tone, which the receivers separate into its component parts. The Morse alphabet is used.—magnetic t., the ordinary electromagnetic telegraph.—mechanical t. 1. Any telegraphic system using positive mechanism, as a wire and signal-bells. 2. Same as AUTOMATIC TELEGRAPH, 1.—Morse t., a telegraph employing the dot-and-dash or Morse code: properly recording in dots and dashes on a continuous paper strip: the first commercial system, set up between Baltimore and Washington in 1844.—multiplex t., a telegraph for conveying more than four messages at the same time over one wire.—office t., a mechanical telegraph, as a system of bells, for signaling between different parts of an establishment.—optical t. 1. A semaphore. 2. A dial telegraph.—pneumatic t. 1. A telegraph in which the signals are given and received by impulses of compressed air, as between the pilot-house and the engine-room of a steamboat. 2. By extension, a telegraph in which messages or signals are conveyed by impulses communicated to a column of water in a tube connecting two places.—quadruple t., a telegraph for the transmission of four simultaneous messages over one wire.—simplex t., a single-needle dial telegraph.—tel′e-graph-block″, n. Naut. A pyramidal block having thirteen small brass sheaves: used in making signals.—t.-board, n. A board at a race-track on which are displayed the names of the horses in a race and of their jockeys.—t.-cable, n. See ELECTRIC CABLE, under CABLE.—t.-carriage, n. A conveyance for carrying the apparatus for a temporary telegraph to be used in connection with a permanent line.—t.-clock, n. A clock electrically connected with a regulator, or a regulating clock in such a system.—t.-cock, n. A compression-cock operated by a pivoted lever like the key of a telegraphic transmitter.—t.-dial, n. A dial on a receiving telegraphic instrument, bearing letters and other characters, on which the message is indicated by a needle or pointer.—t.-key, n. The operating-key of a telegraphic transmitter, for producing the dots and dashes or right-and-left needle-deflections of the code.—t.-line, n. An electrical circuit establishing telegraphic connection between two points.—t.-plant, n. An East-Indian plant (Desmodium gyrans) of the bean family, with trifoliolate leaves and terminal racemes of violet flowers, remarkable for the movement of its leaves without mechanical irritation. moving-plant″‡; sensitive-plant″‡; wind-mill-plant″‡.—t.-pole, n. A pole on or from which overhead telegraph-wires are strung.—t.-post‡.—t.-reel, n. The reel on which the tape of a recording telegraphic receiver is wound, and from which it is unrolled as the message is received.—t.-register, n. A receiving telegraphic instrument that records permanently the signals received.—t.-wire, n. The wire of a telegraph-line, or wire suitable for it.

tel′e-graph″er, tel'ę-grǫf'ęr, C.[1] W.[2], or tel-eg'rą-fęr (tĭ-leg'-, C.[2] W.[1]), n. One who sends messages by telegraph; one skilled in telegraphy. tel′e-graph-op″-er-a-tor‡.

tel″e-graph′ic, tel'ę-graf'ĭc, a. Of or pertaining to the telegraph; transmitted or made by telegraphy; as, a telegraphic code; telegraphic communications.

Who can say what telegraphic communication there may be through our atmosphere, and without wires!
W. M. BAKER His Majesty, Myself ch. 10, p. 87. [R. BROS. '80.]

tel″e-graph′ic-al‡.—telegraphic code, a code convenient for use in telegraphing; specifically, the Morse code, consisting of dots and dashes. See table in preceding column.

tel″e-graph′o-phone, tel'ę-graf'o-fōn, n. An instrument for reproducing at a distance from a phonographic or graphophonic record the sounds which the latter represents, or for producing at a distance a phonographic or graphophonic record of sounds. [< TELE- + GRAPHO- + Gr. phōnē, voice.]

tel′e-graph-y, tel'ę-graf-i, C.[1], or tel-eg'rą-fi (tĭ-leg'-, C.[2] W.), n. The art, science, or process of conveying intelligence by telegraph; the art of constructing and operating telegraphs.—American system of telegraphy, the Morse system. For other systems, see TELEGRAPH.

tel″ei-an′thous, tel'ai-an'thus, a. Bot. Having perfect flowers; hermaphrodite. [< Gr. teleios, perfect, + anthos, flower.]

tel-e′i-ty‡, n. Tendency toward an end or object.

tel-em′e-ter, tel-em'ę-tęr, n. 1. An apparatus for determining distances on the earth's surface; used in surveying and artillery practise. 2. An apparatus for electrically recording at a distance the indications of a physical or meteorological instrument; a telethermometer, a telebarometer, or some similar device. [< F. télémètre, < Gr. têle, far off, + metron, measure.]—acoustic telemeter, an instrument for measuring a distance by the time taken for a sound to traverse it.
—tel″e-met′ric, a. Pertaining to a telemeter or to telemetry.

A Telemeter.

It operates on the principle of a box-sextant, and serves also as a range-finder: t, observing-tube; m, mirrors; s, micrometer.

tel-em′e-try, tel-em'ę-tri, n. The art of using the telemeter, in either sense. (1) The determination of distances with a telemeter. (2) The recording at a distance of the indications of physical instruments.

This term, Telemetry, has been applied to electrical apparatus, by which variable physical forces, such as temperature and pressure, are indicated and recorded at any distant point. H. E. ALVORD in Proc. A. A. A. S. vol. xxxiv, p. 81. [PUB. BY SEC. '86.]

teleo-, tele-, tel'ę-o-, C. W.[2] (tĭ'le-o-, W.[1]). Derived from Greek teleos, complete, perfect (< telos, end): combining forms.—Tel″e-o-brau′chi-a, n. pl. Conch. A division of tænioglossate rostriferous gastropods having a well-developed gill and mouth of shell entire or little siphonate, as Rissoidæ, Cerithiidæ, etc.—tel″e-o-brau′chi-ate, a. & n.—Tel″e-o-ceph′a-li, n. pl. Ich. An order of teleost fishes, especially those having cranial and opercular bones in full number, anterior vertebræ separate, and no mesocoracoid, as in perch, pike, etc.—tel″e-o-ceph′al, n.—tel″e-o-ceph′al-ous, a.—Tel″e-o-des-ma′ce-a, n. pl. Conch. An order of bivalves with a complete hinge-ligament and cardinal teeth, as in clams and most species.—tel″e-o-des-ma′ce-an, a. & n.—tel″e-o-des-ma′ceous, a.—tel″e-o-pho′bi-a, n. Reluctance to accept or believe in teleology.—tel″e-o-phore, n. Zoöph. A gonotheca.—tel″e-o-phyte, n. Bot. A complete plant; a plant composed of cells united into tissues and tissue-systems, as a tree.—tel″e-or-gan′ic, a. Adapted to, serving the purposes of, or necessary to an organism.—tel″e-o-saur″ (XIII), n. One of the Teleosauridæ.—Tel″e-o-sau′ri-dæ, n. pl. Herp. A Mesozoic family of amphicœlian crocodilians having the supratemporal fossæ much larger than the orbits.—tel″e-o-sau′ri-an, a. & n.—tel″e-o-sau′rid, n.—tel″e-o-sau′roid, a. & n.—Tel″e-o-sau′rus, *n. It treats of the nature of final cause, and of the principles of order and design considered in themselves and in their relations to the cosmos and the First Cause. See TELEOLOGICAL ARGUMENT.

Teleology was applied to the deduction of the existence of a Supreme Being by Anaxagoras, by Socrates and his school, and the Stoics. It was criticised by Maupertius and Kant and is one of the vital questions of our own day.

K.-F. Vocab. Philos. p. 887. [SH. & CO. '78.]

The evolution which was at first supposed to have destroyed teleology is found to be more saturated with teleology than the view which it superseded. AUBREY MOORE in Charles Gore's Lux Mundi, Christian Doctrine of God p. 105. [J. M. '89.]

2. Biol. (1) The doctrine of design, which assumes that the phenomena of organic life and development can be explained only by conscious or purposive causes, and not by mechanical causes.

Teleology implies that the organs of every organism are perfect and cannot be improved; the Darwinian theory simply affirms that they work well enough to enable the organism to hold its own against such competitors as it has met with, but admits the possibility of indefinite improvement. HUXLEY Lay Sermons, Criticisms on Origin of Species p. 332. [MACM. '70.]

(2) The science of organic adaptations. LANKESTER in Encyc. Brit. 9th ed., xxiv, p. 802. 3. The doctrine of ends in morality, prudence or policy, and esthetics. [E.] [< TELEO- + -LOGY.] —tel″e-ol′o-gist, n. The doctrine of or belief in final causes.—tel″e-ol′o-gist, n. One who studies, believes in, or is versed in teleology.

tel″e-om′e-ter, tel″ē-om′ē-tėr, n. A telemeter: a misleading form.

tel′e-path-ize, tel′ē-path-īz, v. [Recent.] I. t. To affect, influence, or act upon through sympathetic connection alone. II. i. To practise telepathy.

tel-ep′a-thy, tel-ep′ō-thi or tel′ē-path″i (XIII), n. The sympathetic affection of one mind or person by another at a distance, through a supposed emotional influence and without any direct communication by the senses; thought-transference; telesthesia. Compare METAPSYCHOSIS; MIND-READING. [< TELE- + -PATHY.]

—tel″e-path′ic, a. tel″e-path′ic-al-ly, adv. —tel-ep′a-thist, n. One who believes in telepathy.

tel′e-pheme, tel′ē-fēm, n. [Recent.] A telephonic message. [< TELE- + Gr. phēmē, saying, < phēmi, speak.]

tel′e-phem‡.

tel′e-phone, tel′ē-fōn, v. [-PHONED; -PHO′NING.] I. t. 1. To send by telephone, as a message. 2. To talk to by telephone; as, I will telephone you from Chicago.

II. i. To send a communication by telephone; talk through the telephone.—tel′e-pho″ner, n.

tel′e-phone, n. An instrument or set of instruments for reproducing sound at a distant point by the transmission of impulses over a conducting wire or cord, especially by the agency of electricity. [< TELE- + Gr. phōnē, sound.]

The simplest form of telephone consists of a cord drawn taut between two drumheads, sometimes called acoustic or mechanical telephone. The ordinary electrical telephone apparatus consists of (1) a transmitter, in which a diaphragm, vibrated by a sound, causes rapid alteration in the strength of an electric current, 2 a wire for conducting this current to a distant point, and (3) a receiver, in which a diaphragm is caused to vibrate by the current, reproducing the sound. In the first electric telephone to come into general use, patented by Alexander Graham Bell, an iron diaphragm is caused to vibrate in the field of a magnet and near the core, so that the strength of the magnet alters periodically as the diaphragm approaches and recedes, inducing a similarly vibrating current in the line-wire, which passes around the magnet. This current, by an inverse operation, causes similar vibrations in a disk in the receiver, thus copying exactly the original sound. In such a telephone no battery is used. Thomas A. Edison devised another way to produce a vibratory current. The primary current of an induction-coil is passed through a piece of carbon, which has the property of changing its electrical conductivity in proportion to the mechanical pressure exerted upon it. The vibrating disk presses with varying force on the carbon, altering the current in the primary and hence the induced current in the secondary, which acts on a receiver similar to Bell's. The Berge transmitter uses a hard carbon block on which rests a spring attached to the vibrating disk, whose movements change the pressure on the surface between the carbon and the platinum contact through which the primary wire is joined. This is the form employed extensively in commercial instruments. With suitably arranged instruments it is possible to transmit sounds many hundred miles. The invention of the telephone, like that of the telegraph, has been a matter of much controversy. Among the contributors to it were Reis in Germany, Hughes in England, and Gray in the United States, with those mentioned above.

Structure of a Telephone.

1. A telephone transmitter (Edison and Gilliland's patent): m, mouthpiece, d, diaphragm, e, electrodes connected loosely with the forked arm ca, which rests in the mercury-cup cmc; w, wire to the diaphragm, wa, wire to the mercury-cup, b, binding-posts. bt, battery; c, induction-coil. 2. A telephone receiver (Bell's pattern): c, coil, d, diaphragm, b, bar magnet surrounded by a non-magnetic cylinder cyl, s, screw for adjusting the magnet; p, p, binding-posts.

Telephones are sometimes named from some feature of construction or operation, as, carbon telephone (in which the diaphragm-vibrations vary, by pressure, the resistance of a carbon button); crown t. A magneto-electric telephone having a coil, an iron diaphragm, and six permanent magnets with their like poles placed together in the center of the coil, their other poles being bent into contact with the diaphragm-ring; dual t. having a double receiver by which the message can be received in both ears; sometimes called bitelephone; electrocapillary t. (in which the impulses are sent by variations in the electromotive force of bounding surface of electrodes in capillary tubes); membrane t. in which the sound acts on a thin vibrating membrane or its equivalent, as a very thin sheet-iron disk; multiple t. having several vibrating diaphragms for increasing the volume of sound; pile t. having in its circuit a voltaic pile; reaction t. (in which the currents induced in a wire coil attached to a diaphragm pass through electromagnetic coils, and thus react on the diaphragm and strengthen its action); string t. (an acoustic telephone); triple t. (having the mouthpiece between two ear-pieces so as to permit talking and hearing without moving, etc.

Phrases, etc.: —chemical telephone, a telephone having a motograph as a receiver. —lovers' t., an acoustic telephone.—tel′e-phone-booth″, n. [Recent.] A closet for a telephone, in which the operator may be shut away from outside noises.—t.-harp, n. An instrument by which to enable large audiences to hear telephonic sounds from one receiver.—t.-line, n. A wire erected, as on poles, to form an electric circuit, establishing telephonic connection between two or more points.

tel″e-phon′ic, tel″ē-fen′ic, a. 1. Of or pertaining to the telephone; transmitted by telephone; as, telephonic messages. 2. Conveying sound to a great distance. tel″e-phon′ic-al‡.—tel″e-phon′ic-al-ly, adv.

tel′e-pho″nist, tel′ē-fō″nist, n. One who uses or is skilled in using the telephone; one skilled in telephony.

tel″e-pho′no-graph, tel″ē-fō′no-grȧf, n. A receiving-instrument for recording a telephonic message. [< TELEPHONE + -GRAPH.]

tel′e-pho-ny, tel′ē-fō-ni or tel-ef′o-ni (XIII), n. The art or process of communicating by telephone, or of transmitting sounds to a distance in any manner.

tel′e-phote, tel′ē-fōt, n. A proposed apparatus for reproducing pictures at a distance, as by causing light to vary the electric resistance of selenium. [< TELE- + Gr. phōs (phōt-), light.] dī′a-phote‡; phe′rope‡.

tel″e-pho′to-graph, tel″ē-fō′to-grȧf, n. A picture obtained or made by a telephote, or electrically received in any way from a distance. [< TELEPHOTE + -GRAPH.]

—tel″e-pho-tog′ra-phy, n.

tel″e-plas′tic, tel″ē-plas′tic, a. Of or pertaining to the process of so-called spiritualistic materialization: a proposed term. [< TELE- + Gr. plastikos; see PLASTIC.]

Tel″er-pet′i-dæ, tel″ėr-pet′i-dī or -dē, n. pl. Herp. A Triassic family of homœosaurian rhynchocephalians with acrodont dentition and tusk-like teeth at extremities of both jaws. Tel-er′pe-ton, n. (t. g.) [< TEL- + Gr. herpeton, reptile, < herpō, creep.]

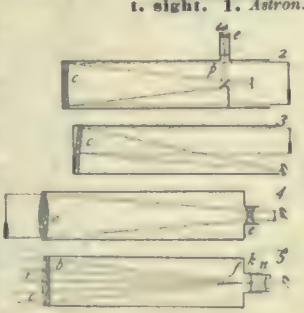
tel″er-yth′rin, tel″ėr-ith′rin, n. Chem. A red crystalline compound obtained when orsellinic ether is decomposed. [< TEL- + ERYTHRIN.]

tel′e-scope, tel′ē-scōp, v. [-SCOPED; -SCO′PING.] I. t. 1. To drive together so that one slides into another like the sections of a spy-glass or small telescope; as, the three forward cars were telescoped. 2. To crush by driving something into or upon.



Both engines were completely demolished, and the mail-car almost wholly telescoped.

New-York Tribune Dec. 25, '91, p. 5, col. 2.

II. i. To move like the sliding portions of a spy-glass in closing; be forced into one another, as railroad-cars.

tel′e-scope, n. 1. An optical instrument for enlarging the image of a distant object on the retina of the eye, or, if the object is a point of light, for increasing its brilliancy, consisting essentially of two parts, an object-glass or mirror for forming an image of the object, and an ocular or eye-piece for viewing this image.

There are two classes of telescopes, the refracting telescope and the reflecting t. The former transmits the rays to a focus through a combination of lenses called the object-glass, the latter brings them to a focus by reflection from a concave mirror. In both kinds the real image thus formed (see IMAGE) is viewed through a magnifying eyepiece. The distinctness of the image depends upon the accuracy with which all the rays from one point in the object are reunited at one point of the image. This is not readily accomplished, on account of spherical and of chromatic aberration. (See ABERRATION.) The former is due to the fact that a spherical surface does not refract or reflect all rays to one focus, and may generally be corrected. The latter can be partially corrected by achromatic lenses (see LENS), which cause the red and the violet rays to fall together, leaving the yellow-green rays nearer the lens, so that the image is usually surrounded by a halo. For photographic purposes the curvature of the lens is such as to focus the violet actinic rays, but such an image is not suitable for the eye. Eyepieces are of two kinds, positive and negative. (See EYEPIECE.) Telescopes of the second class focus the rays by a mirror of speculum-metal or silver on glass, and are of several kinds: (1) the Newtonian t., in which the mirror is perpendicular to the axis, and the reflected rays, falling on an inclined plane mirror, are turned out to one side of the tube; (2) the Gregorian t., in which the rays are reflected back along the axis by a small concave mirror, and are seen through a hole in the center of the large mirror; (3) the Herschelian t., in which the rays are reflected to the front of the telescope at the edge of the tube. (See also CASSEGRAINIAN, GALILEAN.) Reflectors are superior to refractors in case of construction and cheapness, in possible size, and in perfect achromatism, but they are inferior in the amount of light that is available, in definition, and in permanence or durability. Large telescopes are now usually mounted as equatorials. (See EQUATORIAL.) Telescopes are sometimes named from the character of the lenses, as, achromatic telescope, aplanatic t., dioptic t., etc.

Telescopes.

1. The equatorial telescope of the Lick Observatory: o, observing-stand; f, finder; c, connecting-rods and clamps; sl, slow motion in declination; t, tube; m, microscope for reading circles; co, objective of 36 inches aperture; w, counterpoise weights; d, declination-circle; da, declination-axis, at right angles to ha, hour-axis, parallel to axis of earth; h, hour-circle; s, staircase; a, driving-clock; p, iron pier. 2. The Newtonian telescope: e, eyepiece; c, concave reflector; p, plane reflector. 3. A Herschelian telescope: c, concave reflector. 4. A Galilean telescope, with eyeglass (e) and object-glass (o) like an opera-glass. 5. A refracting telescope: c, crown lens of objective; b, flint lens; r, rays; f, focus of rays; k, field-lens of eyepiece; n, eye-lens (with field-lens forming the ocular).

The Telescope . . . appears to have been invented by Metius, a native of Holland, in 1608. Galileo, hearing of the invention, constructed an instrument for himself, and was the first to turn the telescope to practical account.

J. N. LOCKYER Elements of Astronomy art. 427, p. 235. [A. '89.]

2. [T-] Astron. Same as TELESCOPIUM. [< Gr. tēleskopos, far-seeing, < tēle, afar; and see -SCOPE.]

Phrases, etc.: —Amici's telescope, a telescope having two telescopes with their planes of refraction perpendicular.—astronomical t., a telescope with an eyepiece that inverts the image of the object.—broken t., a telescope having its axis bent at right angles about halfway between the object-glass and the focus, a mirror or prism reflecting the rays. Compare EQUATORIAL COUDÉ. —dumb t., a telescope-tube without glasses, for sighting only, as the line-telescope of a sextant.—equatorial t., see EQUATORIAL. —Keplerian t., a refracting telescope having a short-focused convex lens for an eyepiece.—photographic t., a telescope fitted with an objective specially adapted for bringing the photographic or actinic rays to a focus. —prism t., a telescope.—submarine t., a telescope for observing objects submerged at some depth in the water; usually a water-tight tube with a glass plate in its lower end.—tel′e-scope-bag″, n. A hand-bag consisting of two stiff cases, the one slipping over the other, the two fastened together by straps.—t.-carp, n. The telescope-fish.—t.-chimney, n. A steamboat-stack whose upper part slides within the lower, to permit passing under bridges. t.-stack‡.—t.-driver, n. The mechanism for moving a telescope so as to keep the same portion of the heavens continually within its field of view.—t.-eye, n. An eye with a retractile eyestalk, as of a geophilous gastropod.—t.-fish, n. A variety of the gold-fish (Carassius auratus) with very protuberant eyes.—t.-fly, n. A muscid fly (genus Diopsis) of the tropics of the Old World, having the eyes on long prolongations at the sides of the head.—t.-joint, n. A joint in which the internal surface of one pipe or tube is made to slide over the external surface of another tube or of a rod.—t.-shell, n. A cerithioid gastropod (Telescopium fuscum), common in India, having a pyramidal shell with numerous whorls.—t.-sight, n. A small telescope mounted on the barrel of a firearm to assist in sighting.—t.-stable, n. An extension table.—terrestrial t., a telescope having an eyepiece that presents an uninverted image of the object.

tel″e-scop′ic, tel″ē-scop′ic, a. 1. Of or pertaining to the telescope; made or obtained with the aid of a telescope; as, telescopic science; telescopic observations.

If an astronomer upon some distant planet has ever thought the tiny orb we inhabit worthy of telescopic study, there can be little doubt that the snowy regions which surround the arctic and antarctic poles must have attracted a large share of his attention. PROCTOR Light Science, the North Pole series i, p. 97. [L. G. & CO.]

2. Visible or discoverable only with the aid of a telescope; not to be seen with the naked eye; as, telescopic stars. 3. Capable of seeing objects at a great distance or rendering distant sight clear and easy; far-seeing or very transparent; as, telescopic vision.

When the atmosphere is telescopic, and distant objects stand out unusually clear and sharp, a storm is near. BURROUGHS Signs and Seasons, Sharp Lookout p. 6. [H. M. & CO. '86.]

4. Mach. Having tubular parts or sections sliding or working within or over one another; having a telescope-joint; as, a telescopic axle. tel″e-scop′ic-al‡.

—telescopic driver, same as TELESCOPE-DRIVER.—t. sight. 1. Astron. A device, such as cross-threads or a pointer, for setting a telescope on an object. 2. Firearms. A sight consisting of a miniature telescope.

tel′e-sco″pi-form, tel′ē-scō″pi-fōrm (tel′e-scop-i-fōrm, C.), a. Of telescopic form; consisting of joints that will slide one within the other. [< TELESCOPE + -FORM.]

tel′e-sco″pist, tel′ē-scō″pist or tel-es′co-pist (XIII), n. One who uses or is skilled in using the telescope.

Tel″e-sco′pi-um, tel″ē-scō′pi-um, n. Astron. A small southern constellation; the Telescope. See CONSTELLATION, 87. [< TELESCOPE, n., 2.]

tel′e-sco″py, tel′ē-scō″pi or tel-es′co-pi, n. The art of using or of making telescopes.

tel′e-seme, tel′ē-sēm, n. Elec. A combination of apparatus, including electric transmitters and an annunciator that indicates on a dial a number, as for indicating at the office the article or service desired by the occupant of a room in a hotel. [< TELE- + Gr. sēma, sign.]

tel-e′si-a, tel-ī′shi-a or -sh′i-a, n. [Rare.] A gem, the sapphire. [< Gr. telesios, finishing, < telos, end.]

tel″es-mat′ic, a. Talismanic; magical. tel″es-mat′ic-al‡.—tel″es-mat′ic-al-ly‡, adv.

tel″e-so-mat′ic, tel″ē-sō-mat′ic, a. Same as TELEPLASTIC.

tel″e-spec′tro-scope, tel″ē-spec′tro-scōp, n. A combined telescope and spectroscope for forming the spectrum of light from a heavenly body; also, a spectroscope for attachment to a telescope; an astronomical as opposed to a chemical spectroscope. See illus. under SPECTROSCOPE. [< TELE- + SPECTROSCOPE.]

tel″e-ster′e-o-scope″, tel″ē-ster′ē-o-scōp″, n. An optical instrument that presents objects in a distant landscape in relief. It has two plane mirrors set at an angle of 45°, and at some distance from each other, and these reflect the light to two mirrors parallel respectively with the others and directly in front of the eyes. The effect is the same as if the distance between the eyes of the observer were greatly increased. [< TELE- + STEREOSCOPE.]

tel″es-|the′si-a, n. Same as TELEPATHY. [< TEL- + ES|AES-|THESIA.]

tel-es′tic‡, a. Tending toward the end or final accomplishment; tending to accomplish a purpose.

tel'e-stich, tel'ē-stic or tel-ēs'tic (XIII), n. An acrostic in which the significant letters are at the ends of the lines. [< TELE- + STICH.]

tel"e-to-pom'e-ter, tel'ē-to-pem'ē-tėr or -top'o-mī'tėr, n. A form of telemeter in which two telescopes are used. [< TELE- + Gr. topos, place, + -METER.]

te-leu'to-form", tē-liū'to-fôrm', n. Bot. The last stage in the life-cycle of the rust-fungi (Uredineæ), or the one in which the teleutospores are produced. [< Gr. teleutē, finishing (< telos, end), + -FORM.]

te-leu'to-spore, tē-liū'to-spōr, n. Bot. The last-formed or winter spore of the rust-fungi (Uredineæ), producing in germination usually a 4-celled basidium, each cell bearing one sporidium, or basidiospore, on a long sterigma: applied also sometimes to the resting-spores of smuts. [< Gr. teleutē (see TELEUTOFORM) + SPORE¹.]

brand'-spore"‡; pseu'do-spore‡.

tel'ford, tel'fėrd, n. Telford pavement. See PAVEMENT.

tel'ford-ize, tel'fėrd-aiz, vt. & vi. [-IZED; -I'ZING.] To make or cover (roads) according to Telford's plan. See TELFORD PAVEMENT, under PAVEMENT. [< Thomas Telford (1757–1834), the inventor of the method.]

tel'ic, tel'ic, a. Connected with or denoting a final cause or purpose. Compare ECBATIC.

> Hina has in matter of fact its strictest telic sense.
> H. ALFORD Greek Testament, Eph. ii, 9.

[< Gr. telikos, < telos, end.]

Tel-if'e-ra, tel-if'ē-rą, n. pl. Zool. The Cœlentera exclusive of sponges. [< L. tela, web, + fero, bear.]

Tel-in'ga, tel-in'gą, n. [Telugu.] 1. One of the people of the eastern part of the Deccan, belonging to the Dravidic group and speaking the Telugu language. 2†. [t-] A sepoy.

tel'i-ost, a. & n. Same as TELEOST.

tell, tel, v. [TOLD; TELL'ING.] I. t. 1. To relate in detail, as a narrative; recount orally or in writing; narrate; recite; as, to tell a story. 2. To communicate knowledge of, especially in spoken words; disclose in any way; divulge; as to tell secrets. 3. To give information or instruction to, especially by word of mouth; inform; acquaint; as, he told me of his misfortune. 4. To give a command to; enjoin; bid; order; direct; as, he was told to obey; they told me to be careful.

> Like Luther's priest, who, when Catholics told him to pray one way and Protestants another, ended by repeating the alphabet, and begging God to frame a prayer agreeable to himself. WENDELL PHILLIPS Speeches, Progress p. 394. [W. W. & CO. '64.]

5. To utter; as, to tell a lie. 6. To express fully in words; make plain; set forth; explain; as, I can not tell you how grateful I am.

> The interior beauty of a soul through habitual kindliness of thought is greater than our words can tell. F. W. FABER Spiritual Conferences, Kindness ch. 2, p. 49. [J. P. '89.]

7. To determine so as to be able to state or declare; discern with certainty; decide; ascertain; recognize; as, I can not tell which is which.

> God hath his mysteries of grace, Ways that we cannot tell.
> C. F. ALEXANDER Burial of Moses st. 10.

8. [Colloq.] To inform with emphasis; assure; as, I tell you, it is cold this morning. 9. To name or count one at a time; enumerate; as, to tell the beads of a rosary; forty-three survivors, all told.

> You that can look through Heaven, and tell the stars.
> JOHN FLETCHER Upon an Honest Man's Fortune I. 1.

10†. To attach as value; reckon; regard.

II. i. 1. To give an account or description; make report; declare; as, the lecturer told of foreign lands. 2. [Colloq.] To give information meanly; act as informer; tattle: usually with on; as, he saw me do it and told on me. 3. To produce a marked effect; as, every blow told; dissipation is beginning to tell on him.

> The jests of a schoolmaster are coarse, or thin. They do not tell out of school. LAMB Essays of Elia, Old and New Schoolmaster p. 84. [W. L. & CO.]

4. [Prov. Eng.] To chat; gossip. [< AS. tellan, < talu, number.]

tel'lu-ral, tel'u-rąl or tel'yu-rąl (tel-liū'rąl, E. I. W.), a. Of or relating to the earth. [< L. tellus (tellur-), earth.]

tel'lu-rate, tel'u-[or tel'yu-]ret or -rēt, n. Chem. A salt of telluric acid.

tel'lu-ret, n. Chem. Same as TELLURID.

tel'lu-ret"ed, tel'u-ret'ėd, a. Chem. Combined or impregnated with tellurium. tel'lu-ret"ted‡.—tellureted hydrogen, a foul-smelling gaseous compound (H_2Te) made by treating zinc tellurid with hydrochloric acid. hydrogen tellurid‡; hydro-telluric acid‡; tellurhydric acid‡.

tel"lur-hy'dric, tel'lur-hai'dric, a. Chem. Derived from tellurium and hydrogen.—tellurhydric acid, same as TELLURETED HYDROGEN.

tel-lu'ri-an, tel-liū'ri-ąn or -liū-, a. Of or pertaining to the earth or its inhabitants. [< L. tellus (tellur-), earth.]

tel-lu'ri-an, n. 1. An inhabitant of the earth. 2. Same as TELLURION.

tel-lu'ric, tel-liū'ric or -liū'ric, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or proceeding from the earth.

> The aspect of aerolites . . . presents, generally, some features foreign to our telluric rocks and minerals. HUMBOLDT Cosmos tr. by E. C. Otté Aerolites in vol. i, p. 130. [H. '70.]

2. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or containing tellurium, especially in its higher valence; as, telluric acid (H_2TeO_4). [< L. tellus (tellur-), earth.]

—telluric bismuth (Mineral.), same as TETRADYMITE.—t. lines (Physics), lines of the solar spectrum that are due to the absorption of the earth's atmosphere.—t. silver (Mineral.), same as HESSITE.

tel'lu-rid, } tel'u-[or -yu-]rid, -rid or -rąid, n. Chem. A tel'lu-ride, } compound of tellurium with an element or an organic radical.

tel"lu-rif'er-ous, tel'u-rif'ėr-us, a. Yielding or containing tellurium. [< TELLURIUM + L. fero, bear.]

tel-lu'ri-on, tel-liū'ri-ęn or -liū'-, n. Astron. An apparatus that shows the motions of the earth on its axis and around the sun, by which day, night, and changes of the seasons are brought about. [< L. tellus (tellur-), earth.]

tel-lu'ri-an‡.

tel'lu-rism, tel'u-rizm or -yu-rizm, n. 1. A supposed magnetic influence or principle pervading all nature and producing the phenomena of animal magnetism; also, the theory of animal magnetism based on the existence of this force or principle: first propounded by Kieser in Germany. 2. Med. The effect of certain soils in causing disease. [< L. tellus (tellur-), earth.]

tel'lu-rite, tel'u-rait or -yu-rait, n. Mineral. A subadamantine white or yellow tellurium dioxid (TeO_2), crystallizing in the orthorhombic system. Called also telluric ocher. [< TELLUROUS.]

tel-lu'ri-um, tel-liū'ri-um or -liū'-, n. Chem. A rare non-metallic element found native as tin-white rhombohedral crystals. It has no practical applications. See ELEMENT.

> Tellurium. Of rare occurrence, either native or in combination with metals. . . . Occurs principally in Transylvania, Hungary, California, Virginia, Bolivia and Brazil. V. VON RICHTER Text-Book Inorg. Chem. tr. by E. F. Smith, p. 103. [P. B. & CO. '83.]

tel'lu-rize, tel'u-raiz or -yu-raiz, vt. [-RIZED; -RI'ZING.] To combine or cause to combine with tellurium.

tel'lu-rous, tel'u-rus or -yu-rus, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from tellurium, especially in its lower valence; as, tellurous acid (H_2TeO_3).

telo-. Derived from Greek telos, end: a combining form. —Tel"o-bran"chi-a'ta, n. pl. Conch. The Scleromorpha.—tel"o-lec'i-thal, a. Embryol. 1. Having the food-yolk at one pole: said of ova, as of birds, with unequal or partial segmentation. 2. Of or pertaining to such ova. —tel"o-lem'ma, n. Anat. The delicate covering of the end-plate of a nerve upon a voluntary muscle.—tel'o-pore, n. Embryol. A terminal pore formed by the closing of the median groove produced by invagination of the blastoderm in some insects.—tel"o-sto'mi-ate, a. Having the mouth at the end of the main axis of the body.—tel-ot'ro-cha, n. [-CHÆ, -kī or -cē, pl.] Helminth. A larval chætopodous annelid with a præoral and a postoral or perianal ring of cilia. tel'o-troch‡.—tel-ot'ro-chal or -chous, a.

tel"o-dy-nam'ic, tel'o-dai-nam'ic, a. Of, related to, or employed in the transmission of power to a distance. [< Gr. tēle, afar, + DYNAMIC.]

tel'o-nism, tel'o-nizm, n. A pseudonym formed from the terminal letters of the real name, as N. S., standing for John Anstis. [< Gr. telos, end.]

Tel'oo-goo, n. Same as TELUGU.

tel'o-type, tel'o-taip, n. A printing telegraph, or a telegram printed by it. [< Gr. tēle, afar, + -TYPE.]

—telotype printing, the printing, as of stock-quotations, at a distance, by telegraphic means.

tel'pher, tel'fėr, a. Of, relating to, or carried by a telpherway; pertaining to telpherage. [< tel- (in TELEGRAPH) + Gr. pherō, bear.]

tel'pher, n. [Rare.] A device or set of equipments for the transportation of goods, etc., by telpherage.

—tel'pher-way, n. A line, road, or way over which goods, vehicles, etc., are conveyed by telpherage. tel'pher-line"†; tel'pher-road"‡.

tel'pher-age, tel'fėr-ęj, n. Automatic aerial transportation by the aid of electricity, especially that system in which carriages having independent motors are run on a stout wire conducting an electric current from which the motive power is derived.

> Telpherage is a name coined by the late Professor Fleeming Jenkin, to designate a system devised by him, by which the transmission of vehicles by electricity to a distance is effected independently of any control exercised from the vehicle. It is an aërial electrical railway. BENJAMIN Age of Electricity ch. 9, p. 177. [S. '86.]

Tel-phu'si-dæ, tel-fiū'si-dī or -fū'si-dē, n. pl. Crust. A fresh-water family of cancroidean crabs with carapace transversely oval and external antennæ short. Tel-phu'sa, n. (t. g.) Thel-phu'si-dæ‡.

tel'son, tel'sęn, n. Crust. The last somite of the pleon or abdomen of a macruran or like crustacean. See illus. under CRUSTACEA and KING-CRAB.

> These two plates on each side, with the telson in the middle, constitute the flapper of the crayfish, by the aid of which it executes its retrograde swimming movements.
> HUXLEY The Crayfish ch. 1, p. 20. [A. '80.]

telt, telt [Prov. or Obs.], imp. of TELL, v.

Tel'u-gu, tel'u-gū, C. (tel'ū-gū', W.), n. 1. The language of the Telingas, one of the Dravidian dialects. See DRAVIDIAN; TELINGA. 2. A Telinga. [< Telugu Telugu, < Telinga, inhabitant of Telingāna.] Tel'oo-goo‡.

te'ma, tē'mą, n. [It.] Mus. A theme.

te-mer'i-ty, tē-mer'i-ti, n. Venturesome boldness; excessive disregard of danger; rashness; recklessness; as, his temerity was severely punished.

> Bravery is the mean between cowardice and temerity. UEBERWEG Hist. Philos. tr. by G. S. Morris, vol. i, § 50, p. 169. [S. '72.]

Synonyms: audacity, foolhardiness, hardihood, hastiness, heedlessness, precipitancy, precipitation, presumption, rashness, recklessness, venturesomeness. Rashness applies to the actual rushing into danger without counting the cost; temerity denotes the needless exposure of oneself to peril which is or might be clearly seen to be such. Rashness is used chiefly of bodily acts, temerity often of mental or social matters; there may be a noble rashness, but temerity is always used in a bad sense. We say it is amazing that one should have had the temerity to make a statement which could be readily proved a falsehood, or to make an unworthy proposal to one sure to resent it; in such use temerity is often closely allied to hardihood, audacity, or presumption. Venturesomeness dallies on the edge of danger and experiments with it; foolhardiness rushes in for want of sense, heedlessness for want of attention, rashness for want of reflection, recklessness from disregard of consequences.—Antonyms: care, caution, circumspection, cowardice, hesitation, timidity, wariness.

tem'i-ak, tem'i-ak, n. [Eskimo.] A kind of fur jacket worn by Eskimos of both sexes.

Tem"no-pleu'ri-dæ, tem'no-pliū'ri-dī or -dē, n. pl. Echin. A family of regular echinoideans with teeth keeled, the pyramids of the jaws having epiphyses closing the foramen. Tem"no-pleu'rus, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. temnō, cut, + pleura, side.]—tem"no-pleu'rid, n.—tem"no-pleu'roid, a.

The Temia (Cryptorhina varians).

Tem"no-pleu-ri'næ, tem'no-pliu-rai'nī or -rī'nē, n. pl. Echin. A subfamily of Temnopleuridæ with a tumid test having a compact apical system.

Tem"no-spon'dy-li, tem'no-spon'di-lai or -lī, n. pl. Herp. A division of labyrinthodont amphibians with vertebral centra incompletely ossified or divided, as in Archegosauridæ, etc. [< Gr. temnō, cut, + spondylos, vertebra.]

—tem"no-spon'dyl-ous, a.

Tem-pe'an, tem-pī'ąn, E. W. Wr. (tem'pī-ąn, C.), a. Pertaining to or resembling the vale of Tempe, between Mounts Olympus and Ossa in Thessaly, famous for its beauty and mild climate.

tem'per, tem'pėr, v. I. t. 1. To reduce in violence or intensity, as by the intermixture of a moderating element or principle; tone down; moderate; mitigate; assuage; soothe; calm; as, to temper wrath; to temper the severity of a judgment.

> The climate is on the whole so tempered by the Gulf Stream that even this part of Norway is pleasantly habitable.
> SARAH M. H. DAVIS Norway Nights ch. 6, p. 143. [F. H. & H. '87.]

2. To mix in the proper proportions; prepare, form, or adapt by or as by mixing; modify; adjust; as, differently tempered individuals; to temper one's desires.

Unless the original passions and appetites be rightly tempered and balanced, the moral sense can never show itself in any strong or sensible effect. W. WARBURTON Divine Legation of Moses vol. i, bk. i, § 4, p. 149. [T. T. '37.]

3. To bring (a metal) to a certain degree of hardness by heating and suddenly cooling.

In tempering steel, the metal is usually heated until it assumes a color, as yellow, brown, purple, or blue, and then plunged into water. The degree of heat (as shown by the color) at which the cooling takes place determines the degree of hardness.

4. To bring to a proper consistency, as clay, mortar, etc., by moistening, and mixing, kneading, etc.

This immortal clay Is tempered in the tears we brush away.
BOKER Hence, Cold Despair! l. 5.

5. To anneal. 6. Mus. To adjust the tones of (an instrument, as the piano) according to an adopted rule (see TEMPERAMENT): said also sometimes of the voice. 7†. To govern; restrain; control: a Latin sense. 8†. To cause to be disposed; dispose. 9†. To attune.

II. i. 1. To become of a desired condition or quality; attain a desired softness, plasticity, or tractability. 2†. To be accordant; agree. [< F. tempérer, < L. tempero; see TEMPERATE, a.]

tem'per, tem|per, n. 1. Heat of mind or passion; angry excitement; disposition to become angry; passion; irritation; irritability; as, to show temper.

My Father . . . in matters of business . . . would take refuge in outbreaks of temper, and the same would be an abrupt separation.
MACREADY Reminiscences ch. 6, p. 77. [MACM. '75.]

2. A general and complex tendency or disposition in man, resulting from the varying predominance of the intellect, the emotions, or the will in the mental make-up; especially, condition or quality of mind with reference to the exercise of the passions, emotions, or affections; disposition; humor; as, the intellectual temper of Coleridge; his temper is sentimental; a brooding temper.

The dogmatic temper is the temper of one who is imperiously confident that he is right when he is not. R. C. MOBERLY in Charles Gore's Lux Mundi, Incarnation p. 351. [J. M. '89.]

3. Composure of mind; equanimity; self-command; calmness; moderation; as, to preserve one's temper.

But there is still a further reason to wish that greater temper had been join'd, at this time, to the same zeal for religion and liberty. BOLINGBROKE Works, Dissertation upon Parties letter iv, p. 54. [T. C. 1775.]

4. The condition of a metal as regards hardness and brittleness, especially the degree of hardness due to heating and sudden cooling. See TEMPER, v., 3.

The temper of our stoutest mail In battle's fiery shock may fail.
W. M. PRAED The Legend of the Drachenfels st. 11.

5. Condition or consistency due to mixture of various ingredients; especially, condition as regards plasticity and homogeneity, as of clay, mortar, etc. 6. Lime or an equivalent substance used in clarifying boiling sugar-syrup. 7. An alloy composed of two parts of tin and one of copper, added to pure tin to make the finest pewter. 8. An alloy of arsenic and lead sometimes used for hardening shot. 9. [Archaic.] Constitutional condition or temperament, resulting, according to the ancients, from the proportions in which the four humors — blood, choler, phlegm, and melancholy — were mixed: the origin of the modern senses 1, 2, and 3.

But he that from an exquisite temper of health, falls into languishing distempers, knows distinctly both how it was, and how it is with him. JOHN OWEN Works, Glory of Christ, Application in vol. xii, ch. 2, p. 563. RAY. '26.

Virtue is nothing but a just temper between propensities any one of which, if indulged to excess, becomes vice.
MACAULAY England vol. i, ch. 2, p. 190. [P. S. & CO. 49.]

Synonyms: constitution, disposition, frame, grain, humor, mood, nature, organization, temperament. See ANGER; CHARACTER.

—good temper, a disposition or mental condition free from irritation or ill humor. —out of t., irritated and annoyed; angry. —tem'per-screw", n. 1. A screw by which well-boring tools are hung from the walking-beam and connected and lowered as the work progresses. 2. An adjusting screw. —to keep one's t., to retain self-command and an unruffled spirit. —to lose one's t., to become angry.

tem'pera, tem'pe-ra, C. dial. tĕm'pĕ-rē, W.; -per-a, E. S.), n. [It. Paint. The method of painting in distemper. See DISTEMPER[2].

The earliest Egyptian paintings . . . are executed in tempera upon the walls of certain tombs. AMELIA B. EDWARDS Pharaohs, Fellahs, and Explorers ch. 3, p. 71. [H. '91.]

tem'per-a-ment, tem'per-a-ment, rf. To constitute with respect to temperament; endow with temperament.

tem'per-a-ment, n. 1. A special type of mental constitution and development due to natural characteristics of the bodily organism, often inherited; prevailing mental disposition or bias resulting from or accompanying such special bodily organization.

The ancients held that temperament is conditioned on the predominance of one of the four humors — the blood, lymph, yellow bile, and black bile — in modifying or tempering the manifestations of the organic functions, hence the temperaments were classified as sanguine, lymphatic, choleric or bilious, and melancholic or atrabilious. (see these words, and phrases below.) Temperament may also be regarded as resulting from the varying predominance of the principal systems in the bodily organization: the respiratory and circulatory system, the nutritive system, and the nervous system. The predominance of the first system indicates the sanguine athletic, muscular, or vital temperament; that of the second, the bilious choleric or in morbid form the atrabilious melancholic t.; that of the third, the nervous mental t. The comparative weakness of all three systems indicates the phlegmatic lymphatic t., and the proper combination of all three, the tempered t.

Both constitutions as affecting the prevailing bias of the mind, have been called temperaments.
K. & Vocab. Philos. p. 511. [SH. & CO. '78.]

2. Mus. The system of tuning a musical instrument so that the intervals between notes of the scale shall follow a suitable law of succession.

In pure or just temperament intervals between the tones are those of a mathematically perfect scale, the frequencies of vibration all having simple ratios to that of the fundamental note. An instrument of fixed intonation, as the organ or piano, if tuned thus, could be used in only one key, or if adapted to others would require an impracticable number of notes; hence, a modification of strict intonation is adopted, the same wire or pipe being made to do duty for several slightly different notes, as C, B♯, and D♭♭. This compromise is called mean temperament. It may be effected in various ways. The most common now in use is equal or even temperament, in which each semitone is the mean semitone, the twelfth part of an octave. Various systems of unequal temperament formerly in vogue made the instrument usable only in certain keys, the others being much out of tune.

3. State or condition resulting from the relative proportions of various qualities or constituents; mixture of different or contrary qualities; constitution; make-up.

There is an Episcopal temperament, and a Methodist temperament, and a Calvinistic temperament, from which sects grow by natural evolution. PHELPS in Elizabeth S. Phelps's Austin Phelps, Sept. 6, '95 p. 226. [S. '91.]

4. [Archaic.] An act or state of adjustment or compromise, as of conflicting views, interests, etc.; also, the means by which such condition or arrangement is brought about. 5†. Condition as to heat or cold; temperature. [< F. tempérament, < L. temperamentum, < tempero; see TEMPERATE, a.]

Synonyms: see CHARACTER.

Phrases:—bilious temperament, a temperament in which the nutritive system is predominant, usually characterized by dark complexion, muscular activity, energy of action, firmness of purpose, and passionate disposition. —equal t. 1. Mus. An equal distribution of the variations of pitch among all the keys. 2. An equable disposition. —melancholic t., a temperament characterized by brooding thoughtfulness, irritability, tenacity of purpose, and obstinacy of disposition. —nervous t., a temperament in which the nervous organization is exceedingly sensitive, characterized by quick mental action and vivid emotions. —phlegmatic t., a temperament in which the lymphatic system is supposed to predominate, characterized by mental sluggishness, pale complexion, flabby muscles, and dullness of passionate emotions. See note under TEMPERAMENT, 1. —sanguine t., a temperament characterized by marked physical vitality, irritability, energy of action, and liability to nervous exhaustion.

tem'per-ance, tem'per-ans, n. 1. The state or quality of being temperate; the spirit and practise of rational self-control; habitual moderation. (1) Self-restraint in the conduct of one's life or business; suppression of any tendency to passionate action; calmness; patience; as, the course of Washington showed wisdom and temperance; the ordinary Scriptural use. (2) Self-restraint in the indulgence of any natural affection or appetency; moderation in the pursuit of a gratification or in the exercise of a feeling; as, temperance in eating; temperance in drinking; temperance in the use of books; temperance in joy or grief. 2. Specifically: (1) The principle and practise of moderation in the use of strong or distilled liquors: the rule adopted by the original temperance societies. (2) In a more recent and generally accepted sense, the principle and practise of total abstinence from intoxicating beverages.

It is by virtue of good authority, therefore, that the word 'temperance,' as specifically used at this day, is generally recognized as an equivalent for 'total abstinence.'
Cyc. of Temperance and Prohibition p. 635. [F. & W. '91.]

3†. Condition as to heat or cold; temperature; sometimes, a moderate or equable temperature. 4†. An act of mixture producing a temper or stable condition, or the temper so produced; temperament or temper. [< F. tempérance, < L. temperantia, < tempero; see TEMPERATE, a.] tem'per-an-cy†.

Synonyms: see ABSTINENCE.

—temperance drink, any non-alcoholic beverage. —t. hotel, a hotel in which no intoxicating liquors are sold. —t. movement, a movement in society or politics having for its purpose the restriction or abolition of the use of intoxicating liquors as beverages. —t. society, an association for promoting moderation in or total abstinence from the use of intoxicating liquors as beverages.

tem'per-ate†, rf. To make temperate; moderate; soften.

tem'per-ate, tem'per-et or -ĕt, a. 1. Observing moderation in the indulgence of the appetites, passions, or desires; specifically, not indulging in intoxicating liquors; as, temperate in eating; a temperate man.

It was excellently observed by Aristotle, that a man is not commended as temperate, so long as it costs him efforts of self-denial to persevere in the practice of temperance, but only when he prefers that virtue for its own sake.
JAMES MACKINTOSH Ethical Philosophy § 7, p. 376. [BL. '36.]

2. Not characterized by passion or violence; mild in tone or character; calm; self-controlled; cool; as, temperate views; a temperate advocate; a temperate address. 3. Moderate as regards temperature; free from extremes of heat or cold; mild; as, a temperate climate; temperate regions. 4. Characterized by moderation or the absence of extremes in any respect; not excessive, lavish, or extravagant; tempered; as, temperate estimates; temperate applause.

It is hardly credible that such a reply could be made by a friendly Government to so temperate a request.
New-York Tribune Oct. 29, '91, p. 6, col. 2.

5. Mus. Tempered. 6. [Rare.] Resulting or proceeding from temperance. [< L. tempero (pp. temperatus), proportion, < tempus, time.]

Synonyms: see SOBER.

—tem'per-ate-ly, adv. tem'per-ate-ness, n.

tem'per-a-tive, tem'per-a-tiv, a. Having the power or quality of tempering. [< LL. temperativus, < L. tempero; see TEMPERATE, a.] tem'per-a-ture, tem'per-a-chur or -tjūr, n. 1. Degree of sensible heat or cold; condition as regards heat or cold, the relation of a body to the heat which it contains as shown by the greater or less tendency to part with such heat.

The temperature of one body is said to be higher or lower than that of another according as it imparts heat or receives it from the other when the two are brought into contiguity. Besides this relative criterion of temperature scientists recognize an absolute one, regarding temperature as a measure of molecular motion and measuring it from the absolute zero (see ABSOLUTE), whose position is calculated from thermodynamic data and laws. The air- or gas-thermometer conforms almost exactly, and the mercurial thermometer quite nearly, to this thermodynamic definition of temperature. Compare THERMOMETER.

ARCH. GEIKIE Text-Book Geology bk. i, § 3, p. 25. [MACM. '82.]

2. Meteorol. Specifically, the degree of sensible heat or cold of the atmosphere, regarded as a feature of weather or climate; as, the temperature for the month of June. 3†. State as regards combination of qualities or parts; constitution; temperament; sometimes, natural constitution; normal condition. 4†. Mixture; a compound. 5†. Freedom from passion or excess; moderation; temperateness. 6†. Temper, as of metal. [< F. température, < L. temperatura, < tempero; see TEMPERATE, a.]

Phrases, etc.:—animal temperature, the temperature of any living animal: in a warm-blooded animal almost uniform and considerably higher than the surrounding external temperature; in most cold-blooded animals but little higher than that of their surroundings. —critical t. (Physics), the critical point of a given gas. See CRITICAL. —isonormal t., the difference between the normal temperature at any time or period and the observed value at the same time or period. —solar-radiation t., the temperature acquired by exposure to direct sunshine as distinguished from the temperature of the same body when in the shade. —tem'per-a-ture-a-larm", n. A device for indicating automatically a variation of temperature from a fixed point. —t.-anomaly, n. The departure from the normal of any observed temperature. —thermic anomaly. —t.-charts, n. pl. Charts of a region indicating temperatures experienced at different points, either by figures or by isotherms. —t. correction, the correction or allowance made in many instrumental readings for the influence of temperature in parts of the instrument. —t.-curve, n. A curve indicating the variations of temperature for a given period. —t. of space, the temperature that would be experienced outside of the earth's atmosphere by an object shaded from the sun: estimated as about −200° Fahrenheit.

tem'pered, tem'perd, pa. 1. Having a temper, especially a temper of a specified kind: much used in compounds; as, quick-tempered; ill-tempered.

I used to think that the wrens were the quickest tempered of all our birds, but probably the humming-birds are their equals in this respect. C. C. ABBOTT Outings at Odd Times, Midsummer Outing p. 302. [A. '90.]

2. Brought to a certain temper, as metal.

The casque was wrought of tempered steel,
The crest of burnish'd gold.
The Hermit of Warkworth in Percy's Reliques fit ii, st. 47.

3. Mus. Tuned or adjusted to some mean temperament, especially to equal temperament; as, a tempered scale. See TEMPERAMENT. 4. Brickmaking. (1) Moistened and worked to the proper consistency, as clay for bricks or molding. (2) Capable of being cut with ease, as bricks made of such clay. 5. Softened or moderated, as by admixture.

The tempered light of the woods is like a perpetual morning, and is stimulating and heroic. EMERSON Essays, Nature in second series, vol. i, p. 140. [H. M. & CO. '90.]

tem'per-er, tem'per-er, n. One who or that which tempers; specifically, a machine for mingling and thoroughly working potters' clay, brick-clay, mortar, plaster, or other materials; a malaxator; a kneading-machine.

tem-pes'tu-ous, tem-pes'chu-us or -tju-us, a. Pertaining to or resembling a tempest; characterized or agitated by tempests, or by violent commotion or passions; stormy; turbulent; as, tempestuous winds; a tempestuous night; a tempestuous spirit. [< OF. tempestueux, < LL. tempestuosus, < L. tempestas; see TEMPEST, n.] —tem-pes'tu-ous-ly, adv. —tem-pes'tu-ous-ness, n.

tem'pl, v. & n. Temple. PHIL. SOC.

Tem'plar, tem'plar, a. 1. Of or belonging to the Knights Templars, or to some organization bearing the same or a similar name, as the Good Templars. 2. [t-] [Rare.] Of or relating to a temple.

The Assyrian . . . architecture was essentially Palatial — as that of the Greeks was Templar. JAMES FERGUSSON Hist. of Arch. vol. i, pt. i, bk. ii, ch. 3, p. 186. [J. M. '74.]

[< LL. templaris, < L. templum, temple.]

Tem'plar, n. 1. A member of a great military order founded in the 12th century for the defense of the Latin kingdom of Jerusalem; a Knight Templar. The Templars, who derived their name from the so-called Temple of Solomon, the palace of the Latin kings in Jerusalem, their original headquarters, existed from 1128 to 1312, when they were accused of heresy and immorality by Philip IV. of France and suppressed by the Council of Vienne.

They were born of a race of funeral flowers
That garlanded, in long-gone hours,
A templar's knightly tomb.
FITZ-GREENE HALLECK Alnwick Castle st. 5.

2. A freemason of an order or degree known as that of the Knights Templars; also, a member of a secret temperance order known as the Good Templars. 3. [Eng.] A law student, or a lawyer, who has apartments in the Temple in London. See TEMPLE[1], n., 6.

A young gentleman of the Temple . . . who spent at the theatres and other gay places of public resort, the time which his father supposed he was employing in the study of the law. . . . Reginald Lowestoffe, such was the young Templar's name.
SCOTT Fortunes of Nigel vol. i, ch. 16, p. 317. [H. M. & CO.]

[< F. templier, < LL. templarius, < L. templum, temple.] tem'pler†.

— Free Templar, a member of a secret temperance order whose members seceded from the Good Templars on the question of the independence of individual lodges.

tem'plate, tem'plĕt, n. Same as TEMPLET.

tem'ple, tem'pl, vt. [Rare.] To honor with a temple; enshrine in a temple; as, a templed god; also, to build a temple in or upon; as, a templed city or hill.

tem'ple[1], n. 1. An edifice consecrated to one or more deities and forming a seat of their worship.

Some of the most noted specimens of architecture have been temples, as those of the ancient Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans and those of modern India. Those of the ancient Greeks were usually rectangular and surrounded wholly or partially by columns. (See GREEK ARCHITECTURE.) Greek temples are distinguished: (1) With reference to the arrangement of their columns, as amphiprostylar, apteral, dipteral, hypæthral, in antis, monopteral, peripteral, prostylic, pseudodipteral, pseudoperipteral. See these words. (2) With reference to intercolumniation. See INTERCOLUMNIATION. (3) With reference to the number of columns in front, as tetrastylic, pentastylic, hexastylic, octastylic, decastylic.

2. Specifically, with the definite article, the edifice that formed the seat of the Jewish worship of Jehovah at Jerusalem. There were three temples: (1) That of Solomon, destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar (about 588 B. C.); (2) that of Zerubbabel, built after the captivity; and (3) that of Herod, destroyed at the capture of Jerusalem in A. D. 70. Little is known of the architecture or arrangement of these temples, except that they were piles of buildings enclosing several courts and having an innermost shrine, the temple proper, planned within like the tabernacle, and containing the golden candlestick, the altar of incense, the ark of the covenant, and the mercy-seat.

When Zacharias entered into 'the temple of the Lord' to burn incense, the people who waited, . . . 'without,' (Luke i, 10), were in one sense in the temple too, . . . while he alone entered into . . . the 'temple' in its more limited and augustor sense. TRENCH Synonyms of New Testament pt. i, § 3, p. 12. [MACM. '54.]

3. An edifice dedicated to Christian public worship, especially a large and grand edifice; in France, a Protestant as distinguished from a Roman Catholic place of worship, the term church (église) being usually confined to the latter.

There is not a more beautiful and solemn temple in the world than the great Cathedral of Seville.
DISRAELI Contarini Fleming pt. v, ch. 4, p. 85. [A. '71.]

4. Figuratively, any place considered as a dwelling-place of deity or as occupied by the personal divine presence; as, "the groves were God's first temples"; "ye are the temple of God."

To Thee, whose temple is all space, Whose altar, earth, sea, skies!
POPE The Universal Prayer st. 13.

5. Mormon Ch. A building erected and dedicated for the administration of ordinances of the priesthood for the living as well as similar vicarious ordinances for the dead. 6. [T-] Either of two medieval establishments in London and Paris, once occupied by the Knights Templars.

The Temple Round Church is the only remnant of the London Temple, the rest of its site being occupied by two collections of buildings known as the Inner and the Middle Temple, which belong respectively to legal societies of the same names and constitute two of the Inns of Court. They are occupied chiefly by barristers and law students. Compare INN OF COURT, under INN. The Temple at Paris served as the prison of Louis XVI. It is not now standing. [< AS. templ, < L. templum, temple.]

Synonyms: see EDIFICE.

— tem'ple-less, a. Having no temple.

tem'ple[2], n. 1. The region on each side of the head in front of the ear and above the zygoma.

No borrow'd bays his temples did adorn.
DRYDEN On the Death of Oliver Cromwell st. 7.

(3) The thing offered or proffered in satisfaction of a debt or obligation.

Phrases: —legal tender, coin or other money that may legally be offered in payment of a debt. By the statutes of the United States the following moneys are legal tender: gold coins; silver dollars, except where otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract; silver coins of a less denomination than a dollar, in sums not exceeding ten dollars, with the same exception. The United States trade dollar and foreign coins are not legal tender. United States notes of various kinds, and (unless otherwise expressly stipulated in the contract) notes issued on silver bullion under the act of July 14, 1890, are also legal tender. The power of the United States to make paper currency a legal tender, in peace as well as in war, was sustained by the Supreme Court in Juilliard vs. Greenman, 110 U. S., 421 (March 3, 1884), Mr. Justice Field dissenting. But it has been held that where a contract stipulates for payment in coin the legal-tender acts do not enable the debtor to tender payment in paper or in any currency other than that stipulated for. The Constitution prohibits the several States from making anything but gold and silver coin a legal tender in payment of debts.—plea of t., a plea by a defendant that he has always been ready to pay the debt demanded, and that before the commencement of the action he tendered to the plaintiff the amount due, which, with interest and accrued costs, he now brings into court.—t. of amends, an offer of satisfaction for a wrong, made with a view to bar an action for damages.—t. of issue, the formal proffer made by a party litigant to submit the point at issue to the proper tribunal for determination; as, the tender of issue on a point of law to the court, or on a question of fact to a jury.

ten'nis, ten'is, n. 1. A game for two, three, or four persons, played by striking a ball to and fro with rackets over a net stretched across a space, called a court, marked off into rectangular divisions.

It is played in two principal forms, an outdoor and an indoor. In the former, called in its modern form lawn-tennis, the ball is struck or served over the net by one of the players (the server) into a specified subdivision or court (see illus.), whence it is returned by one of his opponents (the striker-out) by striking it on first bound. After this it is struck to and fro over the net either before or on the first bound until it does not fall within the whole court or can not be returned, when the side opposed to the player so failing scores a point. In serving, however, the first failure does not count. The points scored are called respectively fifteen, thirty, forty, deuce, vantage, and game. (See these words.) The indoor form of the game, now called usually court-tennis, is played in a special building lighted from the roof (see illus.). The method of play is similar to that of lawn-tennis, but more elaborate. Thus, if a player fail to return the ball before second bound, a chase is said to be made. Note is taken of the cross-line where the ball struck, and when one side has scored 40, or when a second chase is made, the players change sides, and the one who allowed the chase to be made tries to return the ball nearer to the end wall than the place where it was marked. Strikes may be won also by sending the ball into certain openings in the wall. Court-tennis became very popular in the middle ages. The outdoor form, though the older, did not take its present shape till about 1874.

Plans of Tennis-courts.

1. A lawn-tennis court for either singles or doubles: a, b, poles to which the ends of the net, n, n, are attached; d e, c g, base-lines, 36 feet long; i, h, half-court line, 42 feet long; k l, m n, service-lines, 27 feet long; g e, c d, side lines for doubles, 78 feet long. (For singles, the parallel lines are used as side lines.) Compare illus. under LAWN-TENNIS. 2. Court-tennis (within a building): A, service side; B, hazard side; a, a, roofed corridor or penthouse; b, b, entrances to the courts, defined by posts; c, grating, permitting a view of the game; d, dedans, or apartment for spectators; e, tambour; f, net; g, grille; h, i, chases.

2. Sometimes, as opposed to lawn-tennis, court-tennis.

Those of the following terms used in the game of lawn-tennis which are not self-explaining will be found defined elsewhere:

ad-van'tage	fault	net	van'tage base'-line'	fif'teen'	re-turn'	van'tage-in'
court	for'ty	serve	van'tage-out'
cut	game	set	van'tage-set'
deuce	let	stri'ker-out'	vol'ley
doub'les	love	thir'ty

The following additional terms are used in court-tennis:

de'dans	haz'ard	tam-bour'

Tennis is said by some to be derived from one of the Roman ball games introduced into Gaul by Roman soldiers. . . . From being an open air sport it came to be played in closed courts, probably at first the court of a castle or monastery, whence the irregular shape of the present court had its origin.

tense, n. 1. Gram. (1) A form taken by a verb to indicate primarily the time, but sometimes also the continuance or completedness of the action, being, or state; also, the temporal relation thus expressed.

The English tenses are formed by inflection endings, as in liked; by vowel-change, as in sang; or by the use of auxiliary verbs, as in shall see, have seen. There are two primary simple tenses, expressing respectively present and past time; but these admit of many modifications both in our own and in other languages. See AORIST; FUTURE; IMPERFECT; PERFECT; PLUPERFECT; PRESENT; PRETERIT.

〈2〉 Grammatical time as expressed by such forms.

There is much discordance in the views of grammarians as to the offices of some tenses and as to the names by which they should be called.

2†. Time. [< F. temps, < L. tempus, time.] tence†.

—principal tenses, in Latin and Greek grammar, the present, the perfect definite (corresponding to the English perfect with have), the future, and the future perfect; distinguished from the secondary or historical tenses. See HISTORICAL.

—tense'less, a. Having no tense.—tense'lessness, n.

ten'si-ble, ten'si-bl, a. Capable of being stretched or drawn out; extensible; ductile. [< LL. tensibilis, < L. tensus; see TENSION.]—ten"si-bil'i-ty, n.

ten'sile, ten'sil or -sīl, a. 1. Of or pertaining to extension or tension; as, tensile action; tensile strength. 2. Capable of being stretched or drawn out; capable of extension; tensible; ductile. 3. Producing musical tones from stretched strings: said of stringed instruments. [< L. tensus; see TENSION.] ten'siled, a. [Rare.] Made tensile.—ten-sil'i-ty, n.

ten'sion, ten'shun, vt. To make tense, tight, or taut; subject to tension: rare except in the past participle.

ten'sion, n. 1. The act of stretching or straining; a making tense; the condition of being strained, stretched tight, or bent.

> The curious tension which may be put upon a rope by wetting it is due to the energy with which the water is drawn into the spaces between its fibres. N. S. SHALER Aspects of Earth p. 306. 〈S. '89.〉

2. Mental strain; stress of mind or feeling; state of exertion or effort; strongly excited condition; as, tension of mind; feelings kept under a tension.

> The severest test of soldiers is to keep still under fire when they themselves can do nothing: the mere order to march or shoot is an immense relief to the nervous tension.
> T. W. HIGGINSON Women and Men ch. 28, p. 144. 〈H. '88.〉

3. Any strained state or relation; as, a tension between persons or governments.

> This action . . . is likely to result in tension between England and France. New-York Tribune Apr. 22, '92, p. 1, col. 2.

4. Mech. (1) A system of forces tending to draw asunder the parts of a body, especially of a line, cord, or sheet, combined with an equal and opposite system of resisting forces of cohesion holding the parts of the body together; stress caused by pulling: opposed to compression, and distinguished from torsion. (2) The condition or state of a body when acted on by such forces. (3) The expansive force of a gas or vapor. 5. A device on a sewing-machine to regulate the tightness of the thread. [< L. tensio (n-), < tensus, pp. of tendo, stretch.]

Compounds, etc.: —electric tension. 1. Electromotive force. 2. Dielectric stress. 3. Surface-density of a charge. In all senses the term is now very generally abandoned. —initial t., stress existing in a gun, due to the method of making, as when steel hoops or tubes are shrunk over it, so as to counteract in some degree the contrary stress caused by firing.—ten'sion-bar", n. A bar by which a tensile stress is applied, received, or resisted.—t.-beam, n. A beam subjected to tensile stress, specifically, a roller used in a loom to keep the web stretched.—t.-brace, n. A tie-rod, tension-rod, or tension-bar: a misnomer.—t.-member, n. A member of a framed structure that receives tensile strains, as a tie-rod.—t. of vapor, see VAPOR-PRESSURE, under VAPOR, n.—t.-rod, n. A rod preventing the spreading of two members of a frame or other structure, by the resistance of its tensile strength; a tie-rod.—t.-roller, n. 1. A tightening-pulley, as for a driving-belt. 2. Weaving. Same as TENSION-BEAM.—t.-spicule, n. Spong. A microsclere.

ten'si-ty, ten'si-ti, n. The state or quality of being tense; tenseness.

> It may be accumulated and concentrated, and thus increased in tensity, or it may be divided and dispersed.
> JACOB ABBOTT Force ch. 10, p. 150. 〈B. '73.〉

ten'siv(e, ten'siv, a. Caused by or causing tension; causing a sensation of stiffness or contraction; as, a tensive pain. [< F. tensif, < L. tensus; see TENSION.]

ten'some, a. Same as TENDSOME.

ten'son, ten'sgn, n. Among the troubadours, a contention in verse between two contestants, each of whom sang in turn, before a tribunal of love or gallantry; also, a subdivision of a chanson composed or sung by one of them. [F., < L. tensione-: see TENSION.] ten'zon‡.

ten'sor, ten'sgr, n. 1. A muscle that stretches or tightens a membrane or part. 2. Math. That part of a quaternion that alters the length of a vector; a scalar consisting of the ratio of the lengths of two vectors without regard to their directions. Compare VERSOR. [< L. tensus; see TENSION.] —tensor palati, a small muscle attached to the base of the skull, that stretches the soft palate. —ten'sor-twist", n. Math. A twist multiplied by a tensor. —t. tympani, a small muscle attached to the base of the skull, that is inserted upon one of the bones of the ear and through it renders tense the tympanic membrane.

ten'strike", ten'strīk', n. [U. S.] 1. Bowling. See STRIKE, n., 1 (2). 2. 〈Colloq.〉 Hence, a stroke of unexampled success; a very profitable bargain; a fine achievement.

ten'sure†, n. A stretching, tension.

tent[1], tent, v. I. t. To cover with or enclose in a tent.

> The heavy darkness which doth tent the sky
> Floats backward as by a sudden wind.
> E. B. BROWNING The Seraphim pt. ii, l. 66.

II. i. To encamp in tents; pitch a tent.

tent[2], vt. 1. To treat or keep open with a tent, as an ulcer. 2. To search deeply, as with a tent; probe.

> What shall it avail a man to endure the lancing, searching and tenting of a wound, if he stay not for the cure?
> JOSEPH MEDE Works bk. i, discourse iii, p. 301. 〈R. S. 1672.〉

3†. To tempt; also, to try; test. [< F. tenter, < L. temptare; see TEMPTATION.]

tent[3], t. 1. † Scot. 1. To pay heed or attention to; observe, note; hence, to hinder, stop, prevent. 2. To attend upon, look after. II. i. [Scot. or Obs.] To be careful; guard often with to. [< TENT[2], v.] tent[1], n. 1. A shelter made of a flexible material, properly of canvas or other coarse textile fabric, supported by a pole or poles, and stretched by cords that are secured by pegs or pins driven into the ground.

Styles of Tents.

1. A double-roofed ridge- or wall-tent, the tent proper covered by a fly. 2. A marquee. 3. A Sibley tent, formerly used by the United States army. 4. The shelter- or "dog"-tent, for two men, now used by most armies in the field.

Tents are sometimes named from their form or some feature of construction: as, A tent (the common ridged tent without walls), bell t., circular, with a hoop for spreading the sides from the central pole), fly-t. (see FLY[2], n.), ridge-t. (having a ridge-pole), wall-t., etc.

> The Arab tent is extremely unlike the usual representations, in which it is shown either as a sort of hut or as a bell-tent, instead of a long black "house of hair," with a low sloping roof and open front.
> C. R. CONDER Tent Work in Palestine vol. ii, ch. 10, p. 275. 〈A. '78.〉

2. Her. A bearing representing a tent. 3. Phot. A dark tent. ten'ure, ten'yur or -yūr (XIII), n. 1. Law. The fact, manner, or means of holding possession or control of that which is one's own; a holding; as, tenure of lands, tenure of office, etc.; specifically, the mode of holding a feudal estate in lands.

The Norman conquest of England (A. D. 1066) led to the introduction into that kingdom of the feudal system of military land-tenures. Assuming the king to be the source of all titles both of dignity and of property, grants of lands from him to his chieftains were made in consideration of military service to be rendered to himself, i. e., to the crown, whenever required. These direct grantees of the crown, tenants in chief or in capite, as they were styled, parceled out their grants among their followers and vassals, for like consideration of knight-service to themselves as mesne lords; and these again to inferior persons in consideration of various kinds of service. Every lay tenure of the kingdom was thus linked with and dependent on its immediate superior grant, all culminating in the king as the lord paramount and military chief of the state. This system of tenure by feuds, grew in time, by its necessary divisions and subdivisions, into a most complicated system of land-tenures, which finally became so irksome that by the act of Parliament of 12 Charles II., c. 24, all sorts of tenures held of the king and others were turned into free and common socage (see SOCAGE), except tenures in frankalmoign, copyhold, and grand sergeanty.

Tenure implied not only the actual holding by one of or under another, but also the terms upon which he held his lands.
EMORY WASHBURN Am. Law of Real Property vol. i, p. 24.

2. The act of holding in general, or the state of being held; the term during which a thing is held; sometimes, the mode or the conditions of it; as, a feeble tenure of life; the tenure of false opinions.

The Carlovingian crown may indeed be said to have been worn on the tenure of continual conquests.

ter'cel-lene†, n. A small male hawk.

ter-cen'te-na-ry, tęr-sen'tę-nę-ri, a. Of or pertaining to a period of 300 years or to a three-hundredth anniversary. [< L. ter, thrice, + CENTENARY.] ter"cen-ten'ni-al‡.

John Bell, the eminent sculptor, who produced the exquisite statue of Shakespeare . . . and several most graceful tercentenary tributes in relievo to the Poet-Dramatist. CHARLES AND MARY C. CLARKE Recollections of Writers ch. 9, p. 115. [S.]

ter-cen'te-na-ry, n. [-RIES, pl.] The 300th anniversary of any event, or a date or period of celebrating it. ter"cen-ten'ni-al‡.

ter'cet, tęr'set, n. Poet. & Mus. A triplet.

The rhymes, it will be seen, rhyme in tercets, as, — one, two, three; one, two, three.
C. H. CRANDALL Representative Sonnets p. 4. [H. M. & CO. '90.]

[F., dim. of tiers, third, < L. tertius; see TERCEL.]

ter'cine, tęr'sin or -sain, n. Bot. A layer formerly supposed to be a third coat of the ovule; a layer of the primine or secundine, or the secundine itself. [F., < L. tertius; see TERCEL.]

tere[1]†, vt. & vi. To rend or tear. — tere[1]†, n. A rent or tear.

tere[3]†, n. Tar.

ter'e-bate, ter'ę-bēt, n. Chem. A salt of terebic acid.

ter"e-bel'la, ter'ę-bel'ą, n. 1. An instrument for trepanning; a trephine or trepan. 2. A tubicolous worm (genus Terebellum). [Dim. of L. terebra; see TEREBRA.]

Ter"e-bel'li-dæ, ter'ę-bel'i-dī or -dē, n. pl. Helminth. A family of annelids with long gills confined to 2 or 3 anterior segments, an arenaceous tube, and no operculum. [< TEREBELLUM[2].]

— ter"e-bel'lid, n. — ter"e-bel'loid, a.

Ter"e-bel'lum[1], ter'ę-bel'um, n. Astron. A cluster of four stars in the rump of Sagittarius, including ω Sagittarii, and forming a quadrilateral. [Cor. < Gr. tetrapleuron, quadrangle, < tetra-, four, + pleura, side.]

ter"e-bel'lum[2], n. 1. Same as TEREBELLA, 1. 2. [T-] Helminth. A genus typical of Terebellidæ. [Dim. of L. terebra; see TEREBRA.]

ter'e-bene, ter'ę-bīn, n. Chem. A light-yellow liquid compound ($C_{10}H_{16}$), obtained by treating oil of turpentine with sulfuric acid, used somewhat as an antiseptic, disinfectant, and deodorizer. [< TEREBINTH.]

ter"e-ben'thene, ter'ę-ben'thīn, n. A liquid compound ($C_{10}H_{16}$) contained in the oil of turpentine obtained from the Pinus maritima. [< TEREBINTH.]

ter-eb'ic, ter-eb'ic (tę-reb'ic, C. W.[1]; ter-ī'bic, W.[2]), a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from terebenthene. ter"e-ben'ic‡; ter"e-bil'ic‡.

— terebic acid, a white crystalline compound ($C_7H_{10}O_4$) obtained by treating turpentine-oil with nitric acid.

ter'e-binth, ter'ę-binth, n. A small tree (Pistacia Terebinthus) with winged pinnate leaves resembling those of the common ash but smaller. See PISTACIA. It is found in northern Africa, the Greek islands, and the dry and warm parts of southern Palestine, where it takes the place of the oak, being confounded with it from the resemblance in its branching. It is called also turpentine-tree, as being the original source of that article. The Chian turpentine of commerce is obtained mainly from this tree in the island of Chios. [< F. térébinthe, < L. terebinthus (< Gr. terebinthos), terebinth.]

Leaves and a Panicle of Sterile Flowers of the Terebinth (Pistacia Terebinthus).

— ter'e-binth tree", n. Bot. The terebinth.

— ter"e-bin'thic, a. Having the properties of turpentine; terebinthine. — ter"e-bin-thi'na, n. Turpentine. — ter"e-bin'thi-nate, vt. To impregnate with turpentine. — ter"e-bin'thin(e, a. Of or pertaining to the terebinth or turpentine; having the characteristics of turpentine; as, terebinthine odors. ter"e-bin'thi-nate‡; ter"e-bin'thi-nous‡.

ter'e-bra, ter'ę-bra, n. [-BRÆ, -brī or -brē, pl.] 1. Rom. Antiq. A military siege-engine for punching a hole in a wall, consisting of a long sharp-pointed beam working in a groove on rollers. 2. Entom. An ovipositor adapted for boring, as in a saw-fly. See illus. under SAW-FLY. 3. Conch. (1) [T-] A genus typical of Terebridæ. (2) A gastropod of this genus; an auger-shell. See illus. under AUGER-SHELL. [L., a borer, < tero, rub.]

ter'e-brant, ter'ę-brant, a. Characterized by boring; of or pertaining to the Terebrantia. [< L. terebrant-us; see TEREBRANTIA.]

Many a terebrant I have known who, in that capacity, to borrow a line from Coleridge, 'Was great, nor knew how great he was.'
HOLMES Over the Teacups ch. 4, p. 83. [H. M. & CO. '91.]

Ter"e-bran'ti-a, ter'ę-bran'shi-ą or -ti-ą, n. pl. Entom. A division of hymenopterous insects with ovipositor modified as a borer or saw. [< L. terebrant-us, ppr. of terebro; see TEREBRATE.]

ter'e-brate, ter'ę-brēt, vt. & vi. [Rare.] To bore or pierce through; bore or become a bore. [< L. terebro (pp. terebratus), < terebra; see TEREBRA.]

— ter'e-brate, a. 1. Having a terebra, as an insect. 2. Adapted for boring, as an ovipositor.—ter"e-bra'tion, n. The act of boring or terebrating; specifically, in surgery, the operation of trephining; the act of perforating a bone by any instrument.

Ter"e-brat'u-la, ter"ę-brat'yu-lą, n. Conch. 1. A genus typical of Terebratulidæ. 2. [t-] A living or fossil brachiopod of this or a related genus. [Dim. < L. terebratus; see TEREBRATE.]

—Ter"e-brat"u-la'ce-a, n. pl. Conch. The Terebratulidæ.—ter"e-brat"u-la'ce-an, a. & n.—Ter"e-bra-tu'li-dæ, n. pl. Conch. A family of arthropomatous brachiopods, especially those having a tumid shell, ventral valve with a prominent beak truncated by a subcircular foramen and with 2 curved hinge-teeth, and dorsal valve with a prominent cardinal process between dental sockets and a slender shelly loop.—ter"e-bra-tu'lid, n.—ter"e-brat'u-loid, a. & n.—ter"e-bra-tu'li-form", a. Having the form of a terebratula.—ter"e-brat'u-line, a. Of or pertaining to the Terebratulidæ. —ter"e-brat'u-lite, n. A fossil of or like a terebratulid.

Ter-eb'ri-dæ, ter-eb'ri-dī or -dē, n. pl. Conch. A family of toxoglossate gastropods having the eyes at the ends of the tentacles and a long turreted shell with a short canal. [< TEREBRA.]

ter'e-dine, ter'ę-din or -dŭin, n. A boring animal, as a ship-worm or teredo. [< F. téredine, < L. teredo (teredin-); see TEREDO.]

Ter"e-din'i-dæ, ter"ę-din'i-dī or -dē, n. pl. Conch. A family of bivalves having a long vermiform body and small anterior perforating equivalve shell, as ship-worms. [< TEREDO.]—ter"e-din'id, n.—te-red'i-noid, a.

Ter-e'do, ter-ī'dō, E. S. W.² tę-rī'dō, W.¹; ter-ī'dō, Wr.; n. Conch. 1. A genus typical of Teredinidæ. 2. [t-] A bivalve of this genus; a ship-worm. See illus. under SHIP-WORM.

Among the Lamellibranchs, or 'bivalve-shells,' we find the Teredo tribe, nearly all of which are peculiar to submerged wood-work, either fixed or floating, and most of them are capable of doing great damage. . . . These creatures are not at all related to the worms, but are true mollusks. A. E. VERRILL in Rep. U. S. Fish Commission, '71-'72 p. 383. [GOV. PTG. OFF. '73.]

ter'ek, ter'ek, n. An Old World sandpiper (Terekia cinerea) having the bill curved slightly upward.

Ter-en'tian, ter-en'shian, a. Of or pertaining to Terence, a Roman comic poet, or to his writings.

The author of "Ralph Roister Doister" has borrowed not a little from the classical comedy—Plautine or even Aristophanic rather than Terentian—to strengthen and refine the domestic interlude or farce. SAINTSBURY Elizabethan Lit. ch. 3, p. 54. [MACM. '87.]

ter-eph'tha-late, ter-ef'thą-lēt, n. Chem. A salt of terephthalic acid.

ter"eph-thal'ic, ter"ef-thal'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from a compound metameric with phthalic acid and derived from oil of turpentine. [< tere- in TEREBENE + PHTHALIC.] —terephthalic acid, a white crystalline compound $C_8H_6O_4$ obtained variously, but chiefly as an oxidation product of turpentine oil.

te'res, tī'riz or ter'ēz, n. A round muscle; as, the teres major or the teres minor of the shoulder. See illus. under MUSCULAR SYSTEM. [< L. teres, round, < tero, rub.]

Ter-e'si-an, ter-ī'si-an, n. Ch. Hist. A Carmelite friar of the order founded by St. Teresa in 1562.

ter-ete', ter-tē', a. Cylindrical or slightly tapering; circular in cross-section. [< L. teres (teret-), < tero, rub.]

ter-e'tial, ter-ī'shel, n. Rounded; as, teretial tracts in the floor of the fourth cerebral ventricle.

ter"e-ti-cau'date, ter"ę-ti-kô'dēt or -dęt, a. Round-tailed. [< L. teres (see TERETE) + CAUDATE.]

ter'gal, ter'gal, a. Of or pertaining to the tergum or a tergite; dorsal; notæal; aboral (in echinoderms); axial (in trilobites). [< L. tergum, back.]

ter'gant, ter'gant, a. Her. Presenting a view ter'gi-ant, of the back; recursant. [< L. tergum, back.]

ter-gem'i-nate, ter-jem'i-nēt or -nęt, a. Bot. Having a pair of leaflets on each of three secondary petioles springing from a common point. [< L. ter, thrice, + GEMINATE, a.] ter-gem'i-nal; ter-gem'i-nous;.

ter-gif'er-ous, ter-jif'ę-rus, a. 1. Bearing or supporting on the back; dorsiferous; as, most ferns are tergiferous, bearing the spores on their backs. 2. Zool. Dorsigerous. [< L. tergum, back, + fero, bear.]

ter'gite, ter'jŭit, n. Zool. The dorsal segment typically in two lateral halves of a somite of an articulate animal. [< L. tergum, back.] ter-git'ic, a.

ter'gi-ver"sant, ter'ji-vęr"sant, a. Practising tergiversation; used also substantively.

By and by I expect the tergiversants will be a considerable party. MOZLEY in Church's Oxford Movt. ch. 3, p. 34. [MACM. '91.]

ter'gi-ver"sate, ter'ji-vęr"sēt, vi. [-SA'TED; -SA'TING.] To be evasive or practise evasion; equivocate or prevaricate; adopt subterfuges; change sides. [< L. tergiversatus, pp. of tergiversor, < tergum, back, + verso, freq. of verto, turn.] ter'gi-verset, —ter'gi-ver-sa"tor, n.

ter"gi-ver-sa'tion, ter'ji-vęr-sē'shun (XIII), n. 1. The act of tergiversating; evasion of a point, as by prevarication, equivocation, or subterfuge.

There was something about him which ennobled tergiversation itself. MACAULAY Essays, Thackeray's Chatham p 227. [A. '80.]

2. The act of turning one's back on some course previously adopted; fickleness or instability of conduct.

His was not the tergiversation of one who seeks to effect his object by fraud and deception, it was rather the hesitation of a mind oscillating between the decision of his own judgement and the opinions and apprehensions of others.

LINGARD England vol. ii, ch. 5, p. 175. [E. C. '27.]

ter'gum, ter'gum, n. [L.] 1. The back; said especially of arthropods. 2. A tergite. 3. One of the paired posterior plates of the shell of a cirriped.

—ter"go-lat'er-al, a. In cirripeds, of or pertaining to the tergum and lateral plates. ter"go-rhab'dite, n. Endom. A plate of the dorsal (inside) surface of the abdominal wall.

ter'let, n. Tercelet.

ter'in', n. Same as TARIN.

term, tęrm, vt. To designate by means of a term; name.

The highest freedom is the strongest necessity, as in chemistry those affinities which are termed elective are precisely the most determined. F. H. HEDGE Ways of the Spirit, Way of History p. 10. [J. R. OSGOOD '77.]

term, n. 1. A word or expression used to express or designate some fixed or definite thing; a word having a limited and specific meaning, naming and characterizing some particular object, quality, state, or the like; especially, a technical word or expression, as in the sciences, arts, trades, and the like; as, the term man; chemical terms; assumpsit is a law term.

The very term miser is a confession of the misery which attends avarice. JOHN HARRIS Mammon pt. ii, § 2, p. 63. [G. & L. '37.]

2. pl. Significant or descriptive words; formal statements; set speech; as, they abused each other in no measured terms.

A witness is not said to swear,
But make oath: that is, in plain terms,
To forge whatever he affirms.
S. BUTLER Hudibras pt. iii, can. 3, l. 705.

3. Logic. (1) A word, or a combination of words, such as may be the subject or the predicate of a proposition.

Prepositions and articles are not terms, but may help to form terms. As language is of use in logic only as having meanings, the word term often indicates the meaning of an expression rather than the expression itself, as when we speak of understanding the terms of a proposition. Logical terms may be classified by their nature or by their relations. Classified by nature, they may be considered (1) as made up of marks, and hence as (a) positive or non-positive, according as these marks are present or absent, and (b) abstract or concrete, as the attributes are separated from or connected with objects; or they may be considered (2) as embodying objects, and hence as (a) singular or universal, regarding the number of objects embodied, and (b) connotative or non-connotative, regarding the connection of the objects with their marks; or they may be considered (3) as mere words, and hence as (a) notative or symbolical, according as they suggest or do not suggest their own marks, and (b) simple or complex, with regard to the number of words constituting the term. Classified by relations, terms are (1) relative or absolute, according to their relations to one another, and (2) compatible or incompatible, according to their relations to the objects of which they are predicated. See all the italicized words

(2) One of the three component elements of the syllogism, each of which is used twice.

The middle term is the term through comparison of the other terms with which the conclusion embodying their agreement is reached. The major term is the predicate of the conclusion, and is compared with the middle term in the major premise. The minor term is the subject of the conclusion, and is compared with the middle term in the minor premise. Compare SYLLOGISM; FIGURE; MOOD; PREMISE; PROPOSITION.

4. A fixed period or definite limit of time; a designated or prescribed duration; as, imprisonment for the term of ten years; a term of office (i. e., of holding office).

For beauty's acme hath a term as brief
As the wave's poise before it break in pearl.
LOWELL The Cathedral st. 3.

There are few persons in this world more to be pitied than the poor fellow who has served his first term of imprisonment. WILLIAM BOOTH In Darkest England pt. ii, ch. 5, p. 173. [F. & W. '91.]

Specifically: (1) One of the legally appointed periods in the year during which courts sit; also, one of similar divisions of the year in colleges and schools. (2) Same as a TERM FOR YEARS. (3) The limited duration of a term for years. (4) Scots Law. A certain time fixed by the court within which a party is required to produce evidence in support of his averment.

5. The time during which anything exists; the period of duration; as, a long term of suffering. 6. pl. Obligations imposed by authority or assumed by contract; conditions offered, or offered and accepted; as, the terms of sale; I can not accept your terms.

No surrender of any army not actually at the mercy of an antagonist was ever made without 'terms,' and these always define the military status of the surrendered.
W. T. SHERMAN Memoirs vol. ii, ch. 23, p. 361. [A. '75.]

7. pl. Hence, mutual footing; basis of agreement or understanding; often preceded by on or upon; as, to be on good terms with oneself.

My policy . . . will continue to be . . . to maintain friendly terms with, but be independent of, all the nations of the earth.
WASHINGTON in Sparks's Writings of Washington, Dec. 22, 1795 in vol. xi, p. 102. [H. & & CO. '36.]

8. That which determines the extent or boundary of anything; the utmost limit; termination; hence, a boundary-line; a dividing-mark.

The woodman and his axe are gone,
His toil has found its term.
HOOD The Elm Tree pt. iii, st. 1.

9. A specified date. (1) One of the days commonly called in England and Ireland quarter-days, or one of the corresponding Scottish days. (2) The day from which a domestic engaged at a hiring-fair dates his or her contract. 10. The menstrual period. 11. Shipbuilding. A term-piece. 12. Math. (1) That which limits a line, surface, or volume, being a point, line, or surface. (2) The antecedent or consequent of a ratio; the numerator or denominator of a fraction. (3) One of the parts of an algebraic expression that are connected by the plus- and minus-signs. 13. Astrol. A part of a sign of the zodiac in which a planet is slightly dignified. 14. pl. [Archaic.] Limiting conditions; controlling circumstances; as, the terms of royalty. 15†. An image, statue, or pictorial representation of Terminus, the god of boundaries. See TERMINUS. terminal figure†. 16†. That to which anything should arrive; point of finality; issue. [< F. terme, < L. terminus, OL. termo, boundary.]

Synonyms: article, condition, expression, member, name, phrase, word. Term in its figurative uses always retains something of its literal sense of a boundary or limit. The articles of a contract or other instrument are simply the portions into which it is divided for convenience; the terms are the essential statements on which its validity depends—as it were, the landmarks of its meaning or power. A condition is a contingent term which may become fixed upon the happening of some contemplated event. In logic a term is one of the essential members of a proposition, the boundary of statement in some one direction. Thus in general use term is more restricted than word, expression, or phrase; a term is a word that limits meaning to a fixed point of statement or to a special class of subjects; as when we speak of the definition of terms, that is of the key-words in any discussion; or we say that is a legal or scientific term. See BOUNDARY; DICTION.

Phrases, etc.:—absolute term. 1. A noun or other expression indicative of nature rather than of relation, as man, woman; opposed to relative term, as husband and wife. 2. Alg. The term of an equation that does not contain the unknown quantity.—abstract t., a word indicating a quality, condition, characteristic, or kind of action.—act t., the concluding term of the university year.—common t. 1. A designation given to things having a set of common characteristics. 2. Same as MIDDLE TERM.—complete t., a term composed of two or more terms united so as to qualify each other and form a new term.—concrete t., a word that designates an actual existence, or a quality, attribute, or kind of action as pertaining to or implying an actual existence: opposed to abstract term.—contradiction in terms, a contradiction involved in the very nature of a statement.—familiar t., a term that is in general use.—general t. [U. S.], a term held by all the judges of a court, or a quorum of them, especially for hearing appeals.—in terms, in set or plain terms: straightforwardly; plainly.—in terms of. 1. In the mode of expression characteristic of or peculiar to (some other thing). 2. In the modes of thought (belonging to some specific sphere).—middle t. (Logic), the term common to both premises of a syllogism, and which does not appear in the conclusion. See TERM, 3 (2).—negative t., a term by which the absence (non-existence) of a quality is indicated, as incomplete.—relative t., a term used to set forth a relation, as father, wife, equal, cause, effect.—special t., a term held by a single judge; frequently, a term held without a jury or for a special purpose.—term'-day", n. 1. A designated day. Specifically: (1) Quarter-day. (2) At hiring-fairs, the day from which the contract of service dates. 2. One of a series of days appointed to take meteorological observations, so as to prepare an official report.—t.-fee, n. A small fee allowed to an attorney in a cause at each term in which some step is taken and taxed in the costs of suit.—t. for years, an interest or estate in land that is limited to a certain period of time, as a year, a fixed number of weeks or months, or a definite number of years, however great.—t. of art, a term of specific sense in some specific branch of study; a technical term.—t. of court, the session of a court commencing at a stated period fixed by law, with adjournments from day to day or from time to time, until final adjournment sine die. In England the division of the legal year into terms has been abolished, and the Supreme Court of Judicature has four "sittings" in every year, viz.: (1) Michaelmas, Nov. 2 (commencing, in fact, by order in council, Oct. 24) to Dec. 21; (2) Hilary, Jan. 11 to the Wednesday before Easter; (3) Easter, Tuesday after Easter week to Friday before Whitsunday; (4) Trinity, Tuesday after Whitsunweek to Aug. 8 (but ending, in fact, by order in council, Aug. 12).—t. of thought, the conclusion arrived at on some matter of reflection.—t.-piece, n. Shipbuilding. A terminal piece under each end of the taffrail.—terms of a proportion, the antecedents and the consequents of a proportion.—to be on terms with, to be in affable or friendly relations with.—to bring to terms, to force into the acceptance of conditions; reduce to a willingness to agree.—to come to terms. 1. To settle the terms of an agreement; contract or enter into a contract. 2. To yield; give way.—to eat one's terms, in English law, to attend the requisite number of term dinners as a preliminary to being called to the bar; hence, to read and qualify for the bar.—to make terms, to come to a specific agreement.—to speak in termst, to speak plainly and in unmistakable language.—transcendent t., a term of greater generality than any of the ten predicaments, as everything, nothing, something, existence, non-existence.—vague t., a term without definite meaning.

ter'ma, tęr'mą, n. [TER'MA-TA, pl.] Anat. A layer of gray matter forming the anterior boundary of the third ventricle of the brain; the lamina terminalis. [< Gr. terma, end.]

ter'pene, tęr'pin, n. Chem. Any one of several isomeric oily hydrocarbons, having a composition represented by $C_{10}H_{16}$, or some multiple of that formula, contained chiefly in various coniferous plants. Oil of turpentine is the typical terpene. [For TEREBENE.]

—ter'pi-lene, n. Any one of the optically inactive isomerids of terpene.—ter'pin, n. A white crystalline compound ($C_{10}H_{20}O$) obtained from oil of turpentine and regarded as its hydrate.—ter'pin-ol, n. A colorless oily compound ($C_{10}H_{18}O$) derived from terpin by treatment with acids, and regarded as hydrate of terpene.

ter'pen-tine†, n. Same as TURPENTINE.

ter"pen-yl'ic, tęr'pen-il'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from a terpene. [< TERPENE + -YL.]

ter-pen'tic‡.

—terpenylic acid, a white crystalline compound ($C_8H_{12}O_4$) obtained by oxidizing a terpene, as turpentine-oil with chromic acid. terpentic acid‡.

ter-pin'nate, a. Bot. Same as TRIPINNATE.

Terp-sich'o-re, tęrp-sic'o-rę, n. Class. Myth. The Muse of dancing. Her attribute is the lyre. See MUSE. [L., < Gr. Terpsichorē, < terpsis, delight (< terpō, cheer), + choros, dance.]

Terp"sich-o-re'an, tęrp'sic-o-rī'ąn. I. a. Of or relating to Terpsichore; of or pertaining to dancing.

Master and Miss Jefferson were to 'execute a fancy dance.' Now, as our terpsichorean education had been rather limited, it is quite likely that the execution was complete.
J. JEFFERSON Autobiography ch. 2, p. 37. [C. CO.]

II. n. [t-] [Colloq.] A ballet-dancer; coryphée.

ter'puck, tęr'puc, n. A hexagrammoid fish (Hexagrammus asper). [< Rus. terpuk', rasp.] ter'puk‡.

ter'ra, ter'ą, n. [L.] The earth; earth.

—terra alba, same as PIPE-CLAY.—t. cariosa, same as TRIPOLI.—ter'ra-cot"ta, n. A species of hard pottery much used in building-ornamentation and in statuary; generally, unglazed pottery, especially in artistic form; hence, a statue or artistic work designed in terra-cotta.

The typical figure represented in these terra-cottas is a seated goddess draped and wearing a high crown (stephanos), richly ornamented with rosettes and sphinxes.
DI CESNOLA Cyprus ch. 1, p. 50. [H. '78.]

—terræ filius. 1. A low-born person; a son of the soil. 2. The author of a lampoon that was formerly periodically written at Oxford University.—t. firma, dry land, as giving firm footing; land, as opposed to water; mainland or continent, as opposed to islands.—t. incognita, an unknown country; an untravelled region.—t. Japonica, pale catechu or gambier, an extract from a Malayan shrub (Uncaria Gambier) of the madder family (Rubiaceæ); a trade name given from the idea originally that it was a kind of earth from Japan.—t. nera, black earth, from which ancient artists in fresco, oil, and tempera painting extracted an oily pigment.—t. orellana, the annatto dye.—t. ponderosa, same as BARITE.

ter'race, ter'ęs, vt. [TER'RACED; TER'RA-CING.] To fashion as a terrace, or to build in successive terraces.

The hills [of Greece] are terraced, and upon some of these terraces there are no vines, and here the grapes are dried before being shipped. F. G. CARPENTER in Am. Agriculturist May, '91, p. 205.

ter'race¹, n. 1. A raised level space, shelf, or platform, having one or more vertical or sloping sides, supported by masonry, a bank of turf, or the like; also, such side or sides and level collectively; in landscape-gardening, a level area, often one of a series constructed on the side of a sloping bank or other situation and overlooking one another and the scenery on one or more sides.

The Peruvians used . . . to cut terraces . . . along the most barren mountain-sides, carefully coating them with soil carried up from below, and cultivating, tier over tier, the vegetables suited to the rapidly-changing climate of each successive altitude. C. W. HOSKYNS Hist. of Agric., Mediæval Period p. 71. [BR. & E. '49.]

2. A raised level supporting a row of houses, or the houses occupying such a position: loosely applied to any range of dwellings placed side by side. 3. The flat roof of an Oriental or Spanish house.

The houses here [at Gaza], as in the East generally, are built of stone, with flat roofs called terraces, on which the inmates sleep, eat, and promenade during the summer, and where all entertainments are given. DE HASS Buried Cities ch. 11, p. 227. [J. W. S.]

4. Geol. A relatively narrow horizontal or nearly horizontal step in the face of a steep slope. From the inner side the surface rises sharply, from the outer edge it falls steeply. A terrace is formed either by erosion (cut terrace) or by deposition (built terrace, terrace of construction). Shore-terraces (along a lake, sea, or ocean) are either wave-built or wave-cut; stream-terraces are cut or built; or stream- and shore-action may be combined in a delta-terrace. Such formations have become exposed terraces either (1) by an uplift of the land, (2) by the deeper corrasion of a stream-channel, or (3) by diminution or withdrawal of the volume of water. bench‡.

Terraces.
Profile of the Shore of Lake Bonneville. (See illus. under FOSSIL.) The successive stages of water-level are shown by the terraces: 1. Old underlying terraced shore. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. Terraces formed in succession by the rising water, the last (7) being the Bonneville shore at its greatest area. 8. The Provo shore, to which the water fell suddenly upon the breaking away of the outlet, and where it remained stationary for a long period.

The rivers of Switzerland . . . show on their banks three well-marked terraces of regularly stratified and well-rounded shingle, identical with the modern deposits of the rivers.
JAMES CROLL Climate and Time ch. 15, p. 239. [A. '75.]

5. An open gallery; balcony. [OF., < It. terraccia, < terra (< L. terra), earth.] tar'race†; tar'ras†; tar'rasse†; tar'ris†; tes'ras†.

—fault-ter'race, n. A terrace formed by two parallel fault-scarps on the same declivity, "thrown" in the same direction.—glacial t., a glacial deposit rearranged in terrace form by water.—landslip t., a short, rough-surfaced terrace resulting from the slip of a segment of a hill.—t. epoch (Geol.), the upper division of the Postglacial. See GEOLOGY.

ter'race², n. Same as TERRAS.

ter'ra-cing, ter'ę-sing, n. The act of making terraces; terraces taken collectively.

ter'ra-cul'ture, ter'ą-cul'chur or -tjūr, n. Same as AGRICULTURE. [< L. terra, earth, + CULTURE.]

ter'rage, ter'ęj, n. 1. A small amount of earth such as is used in a pot for an indoor plant. 2. Old Eng. Law. A fee paid to a landowner for some privilege granted by him. [< F. terre (< L. terra), earth.] ter'ri-age†.

ter"ra-ma'ra, ter'ą-mā'rą, n. [-RE, -rē, pl.] 1. An earthy deposit containing organic, phosphatic, and calcareous mineral matter, useful as a fertilizer. 2. A deposit found in southern Europe, containing prehistoric remains, as bones, pottery, and various rude implements, often associated with shell-heaps, and somewhat similar to the kitchen-midden of northern Europe. [< It. terra amara; terra (< L. terra), earth; amara (< L. amarus), bitter.] ter"re-ma're‡ [Erroneous form].

ter'rane, ter'ān, W. Wr. (te-rān', C.), n. 1. In geology, any rock, or any series of rocks or formations continuously related. 2. A region considered in relation to its fitness for some purpose; an extent of ground or territory.

Moving by the right . . . would have brought him [General Grant] into immediate collision with the enemy on a terrain more suitable for field operations. NICOLAY AND HAY Abraham Lincoln vol. viii, ch. 14, p. 349. [C. CO. '90.]

ter-ra'ne-an, ter-rē'ne-an, a. Existing on or within the earth. [< L. terra, earth.]

—ter-ra'ne-ous, a. Bot. Growing on land.

Ter"ra-pe'nes, ter'ə-pī'nēz or -pē'nēs, n. pl. Herp. The ambulatorial cryptodirous tortoises. [NL., < TERRAPIN.]

ter'ra-pin, ter'ə-pin, n. 1. One of various emydoid tortoises; specifically, the salt-marsh terrapin or diamondback (Malaclemmys palustris), of the Atlantic coast of the United States, south of New York, famous for its delicate flesh. It is caught in great numbers in summer and kept in pens for sale in winter, the females with eggs (full cows) being considered the best. The red-bellied t. or slider (Pseudemys rubriventris), ranging from New Jersey to Virginia, is much used as a substitute for the diamondback. 2. The cooked flesh of the above as a table dish. 3. Some other tortoise; as, an alligator-terrapin; the pine-barren terrapin or gopher. ter-res'tre†, a. Terrestrial.

ter-res'tri-al, ter-res'tri-al, a. 1. Belonging to, limited by, or identical with the earth; of or pertaining to the terraqueous globe; also, representing the earth: opposed to what is celestial or pertains to other planets; as, terrestrial seasons, a terrestrial globe. 2. Composed of land or earth; not aqueous or gaseous; also, pertaining to land or earth; as, a terrestrial substance.

AGASSIZ Journey in Brazil ch. 8, p. 256. [T. & F. '68.]

3. Living and moving on the earth, having its habitat on the ground: in zoology, opposed to aquatic, arboreal, and aerial; in botany, opposed to aquatic and epiphytic.

Oceanic islands are inhabited by bats and seals, but by no terrestrial mammals.
DARWIN Origin of Species vol. i, ch. 7, p. 281. [J. M. '88.]

4. Of or pertaining to matters of the world; mundane.

Ascend, and recognise their native place.
POPE The Dunciad bk. i, l. 267.

[OF., < L. terrestris, < terra, earth.] ter-res'tri-ous†.

—terrestrial currents (Physics), currents of electricity which run through the earth. —t. radiation, a radiation of heat from the earth's surface directly to the clear sky. By this means nearly all the solar heat coming to the earth is disposed of. It is believed that there is almost a perfect equilibrium between the heat received and that radiated, so that the earth is becoming neither hotter nor colder. Probably a very small part of the solar heat is radiated from the clouds.

—ter-res'tri-al, n. An inhabitant of the earth. —ter-res'tri-al-ize, vt. To make terrestrial. ter-res'tri-al-ly, adv. ter-res'tri-al-ness, n.

ter'ri-to"ry, ter'i-to-ri, n. [-RIES, pl.] 1. The entire domain or any one domain over which a sovereign state exercises jurisdiction as by right of sovereignty; as, the territory or territories of Russia; it happened within United States territory.

We banish you our territories.
SHAKESPEARE King Richard II. act i, sc. 3.

2. Hence, any considerable tract of land; a region; district; country; figuratively, extent; compass.

The Icelandic colonists in Greenland do not appear to have been confined to a small portion of territory. B. F. DA COSTA Pre-Columbian Discovery of Am. intro., p. 30. [J. M. S. '90.]

3. [T-] A division of the national domain of the United States that, by act of Congress, has been organized under a separate government in the expectation that it, or some part thereof, will ultimately be admitted into the Union as a State; as, Arizona is a Territory.

An organized Territory has a government similar in many respects to that of a State, but its political entity is wholly under the authority of the federal government.

4. [T-] A division of the British possessions of North America that has a government somewhat similar to that described in def. 3, but which has not yet been formed into a province. [< F. territoire, < L. territorium, < terra, earth.]

ter'ror, ter'ər, n. 1. An impulse of fear so great as temporarily to overwhelm the mind; extreme fright.

The emotion of terror shows itself by tremblings of lip and limb, a dropping of the jaw, suppressed breathing, a deadly pallor of the face, and staring eyes.
ST. GEORGE MIVART On Truth ch. 14, p. 196. [K. P. & CO. '89.]

2. That which causes extreme fear or excites overmastering alarm or dread; humorously, an intolerable nuisance or bore; as, the book-agent was a terror.

His desire to be alone had already led him to feel it his duty to shoot and kill two men, so that some of his neighbors called him a 'terror.' JOSIAH ROYCE California ch. 4, p. 295. [H. M. & CO. '88.]

[< F. tereur, < L. terror, < terreo, frighten.] ter'rour†.

Synonyms: see ALARM; FEAR[1]; FRIGHT.

—king of terrors, death.—the Reign of Terror, the T., the period of the French Revolution from May, 1793, to August, 1794, during which Louis XVI., Marie Antoinette, and thousands of other persons were guillotined.

Terror is an element of many self-explaining compounds; as, terror-breathing, t.-fraught, t.-giving, t.-haunted, t.-smitten, t.-stricken.

ter'ror-ise, etc. Same as TERRORIZE, etc.

ter'ror-ism, ter'ər-izm, n. The act of terrorizing, or the state of being terrorized; coercive intimidation.

In his own cabin at home he sinks before the terrorism of the secret societies.
FROUDE English in Ireland vol. iii, bk ix, ch. 1, p. 223. [S. '74.]

ter'ror-ist, ter'ər-ist, n. 1. One who adopts or supports a policy of terrorism; specifically, a Jacobin or red Republican of the French Revolution of 1789, and especially during the Reign of Terror. 2. A Russian nihilist.

ter'ror-ite, ter'ər-it, n. An extra-strong high explosive of the nitroglycerin type.

[< TERROR.]

Terrorite is described as more powerful than high grade dynamite and safer to handle than gunpowder.
New York Herald Sept. 8, '91, p. 11, col. 2.

ter'ror-ize, ter'ər-iz, vt. [-IZED; -I'ZING.] To reduce to a state of terror, especially for a length of time; subdue, govern, or restrain by terror; terrify. ter'ror-ise‡.—ter"ror-i-za'[or -sa']tion, n. Terrorism.

Assassins must be taught unmistakably that bribery or terrorization to secure control of juries and courts will not secure immunity for crime. Harper's Weekly Mar. 28, '91, p. 218, col. 3.

terse, tərs, a. 1. Sententiously concise; short and pointed; pithy.

In most cases it will be found that the Victorian idiom is clearer but less terse than the corresponding Elizabethan idiom which it has supplanted. E. A. ABBOTT Shakespearian Grammar intro., p. lii. [MACM. '73.]

2†. Rubbed to a polish; clean and smooth: said of things. 3†. Polished and refined: said of persons. [< L. tersus, pp. of tergo, rub off.]

Synonyms: brief, compact, compendious, concise, condensed, laconic, pithy, sententious, short, succinct. Anything short or brief is of relatively small extent. That which is concise is trimmed down, and that which is condensed is, as it were, pressed together, so as to include as much as possible within a small space. That which is compendious gathers the substance of a matter into a few words, weighty and effective. The succinct has an alert effectiveness as if girded for action. The summary is compacted to the utmost, often to the point of abruptness, as, we speak of a summary statement or a summary dismissal. That which is terse has an elegant and finished completeness within the smallest possible compass. A sententious style is one abounding in sentences that are singly striking or memorable, apart from the context; the word may be used invidiously of that which is pretentiously oracular. A pithy utterance gives the gist of a matter effectively, whether in rude or elegant style. See BRIEF.—Antonyms: diffuse, lengthy, long, prolix, tedious, verbose, wordy.

ter'za, tėr'tsą, a. [It.] The third.—ter"za-ri'ma, n. [TER'ZE-RI'ME, pl.] A form of Italian triplet, in iambic decasyllables or hendecasyllables, in which the middle line of the first triplet rimes with the first and third lines of the following triplet, succeeded by a similar arrangement for all following triplets, as in Dante's "Divina Commedia" and Longfellow's translation of it, and in Byron's "Prophecy of Dante"; thus:

O wild West Wind, thou breath of Autumn's being,
Thou from whose unseen presence the leaves dead
Are driven like ghosts from an enchanter fleeing,
Yellow, and black, and pale, and hectic red,
Pestilence-stricken multitudes! O thou Who chariotest to their dark wintry bed
The winged seeds. SHELLEY Ode to the West Wind st. 1.

terz"de-ci-mo'le, terts'dė-sī-mō'lė, n. Mus. A group of thirteen notes played in the time of eight or of twelve. [< It. terzo (see TERZET) + DECIMOLE.]

Apparatus for Marsh's Test for Arsenic or Antimony.

To insure absolute purity of the hydrogen used in the test, and to collect all the arsenic or antimony by differing processes and in varying forms, I made the following modification of the Marsh test, and first employed it in toxicological research in 1850. Distilled water is electrolytically decomposed in the U tube (a), in which tongues of platinum (b) are inserted. The oxygen evolved is collected in the Woulfe bottle (c) for subsequent use. The suspected liquid is introduced by the funnel (g). Should it contain arsenic or antimony they will be in part deposited on the negative electrode; also, a portion converted into arseniureted or antimoniureted hydrogen. When either of these gases comes in contact with the sticks of potassium hydroxid in the tube (d) active oxygen is set free and dehydrogenates them, causing dark deposits of arsenic or of antimony to appear on their surfaces. Other portions of the gases are decomposed in passing through the glass coils (e, e), heated by Bunsen burners (e[1] is a figure of one of these coils on a larger scale), and deposits of arsenic or of antimony appear in the cold parts of the tube (h, h); any residues of the gases are turned into arsenious acid in one case or silver antimonid in the other, as they pass into the silver-nitrate solution (f). Portions of the dark deposits (h, h), when gradually heated, may be oxidized by slowly displacing the oxygen from the bottle (c) by water from a funnel (k), drying it, and observing its speed of discharge as it bubbles through sulfuric acid in the bottle (l). The white oxids which appear at m, m, beyond the heated coils, are photographed, and otherwise tested, deposits on the platinum, and on the sticks of potassium hydroxid, are tested, and the nitrate solution is also examined.
